Mrs. Taylor: With regard to the hon. Gentleman's first point about the problem of housing benefits and young people, we all recognise the difficulties that have been caused by the changes made by the previous Government. Unfortunately, the savings that were to come from those changes form part of the expenditure plans that we inherited. As my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury said yesterday, the Government are reviewing all the options. We shall have to see what can be done in this field, as in many others, and I do not want to pre-empt any decision that may be made.

Discussions took place through the usual channels about the debate on Europe next Thursday, and it was thought that three hours would be for the convenience of the House on this occasion. I am sure that hon. Members will want to participate in that debate.

I cannot guarantee the two-day debate that the hon. Gentleman wants following the Amsterdam summit, but I have said that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister will make a statement to the House about the outcome. I must tell the hon. Gentleman that if he wants an extra two days' debate, that makes it even more unlikely that I shall be able to say anything in the near future in answer to his question about the summer recess.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): Could my right hon. Friend arrange for a statement to be made about the continuing crisis in the coal mining industry, which is now privately owned? We hear stories of the evil monster, the Tory Budge, sacking workers because they refuse to work two consecutive 11-hour shifts, and for no other reason. At the same time, he is going around the old pit villages recruiting people to work two 11-hour shifts at the weekend, although some of those people work from Monday to Friday in other occupations. That is the scandal of a privatised industry—a dangerous industry, given that people are being required to work for so many hours.

Mrs. Taylor: I cannot guarantee my hon. Friend a statement, but I think that the safety implications could be significant, and I shall undertake to draw them to the attention of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

Mrs. Cheryl Gillan (Chesham and Amersham): May I ask the Leader of the House again whether we can have an urgent debate on the Department for Education and Employment, on what resources it has and on whether it is using them effectively?

Yet another week has passed, and the Department has made no decision on the age of transfer of pupils in Buckinghamshire. That is causing a great deal of anxiety to parents, pupils and schools, and is already beginning to disrupt children's education. I think that we need a debate so that we can see how the Department has time to do its job. It appears to have time to appoint more political advisers; why does it not have time to make a decision on Buckinghamshire children?

Mrs. Taylor: The hon. Lady was a Minister. She will know that, when decisions of that kind are made, many factors must be taken into account, including all the representations that are made. [Interruption.] She may say that the decision could have been made before the election, but that does not mean that the new Ministers will automatically agree with her conclusion.

I think that my right hon. and hon. Friends in the Department for Education and Employment have been very active, in an extremely positive way. Many parents throughout the country will welcome the statements that we have heard emphasising the need to improve children's education from the earliest stage, and about extra literacy classes in the summer. I shall, of course, undertake to ensure that my right hon. and hon. Friends know of the hon. Lady's concern about the delay, but I do not think that she is right to say that they have been inactive. I think that they have been working very successfully.

Mr. Gerald Bermingham (St. Helens, South): Will my right hon. Friend grant me one favour that I failed to gain from her distinguished and honourable predecessor, who is no longer with us? I refer to a debate on prisons. At present, we not only have a floating prison ship; we have overcrowding in prisons, there are not enough places for female prisoners and there are days when there are lock-outs because of the lack of space. There is a good deal to discuss, and the Select Committee on Home Affairs will not be established for some time. The matter is urgent, and it should be debated before the summer is out.

Mrs. Taylor: My hon. Friend has put his request in a measured way, looking to the longer term rather than just to next week. I am sure that, given his ingenuity, he will find time to raise prison issues, probably on more than one occasion. Home Office questions are coming up shortly, and no doubt my hon. Friend will be able to explore other ways of raising those issues.

Mr. Edward Garnier (Harborough): The right hon. Lady will understand the disappointment of my farming constituents that she has been able to find only three hours for a debate next Thursday on the common agricultural policy. Will she undertake to find more time for a debate on agriculture before we break for the recess? She will understand the acute anxieties felt by farmers in my constituency—be they beef, dairy or arable farmers—about the current agricultural crisis. I urge her to find a full day on which we can debate this serious issue.

Mrs. Taylor: The hon. and learned Gentleman will have heard what my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food said a few moments ago. My right hon. Friend recognises the anxiety that the crisis has caused, but he also recognises the origins of the problem and the fact that it was the previous Government who made it even more difficult for us to get the settlement that we want.

The hon. and learned Gentleman asked for a debate of more than three hours next week. The time for the debate was agreed through the usual channels. If he wants extra time to debate this or any other matter, he will note that I have said that I hope to find time for an Opposition day in the week after next.

Mr. Chris Pond (Gravesham): Will my right hon. Friend find time next week for an urgent debate on the decision by the new Conservative-controlled Kent county council to freeze all capital spending, including that on schools? That will mean that children in my constituency and others in Kent will be taught in quite unsatisfactory conditions and, of course, that runs counter to the Government's intention of improving quality in schools and in education generally.

Mrs. Taylor: I thank my hon. Friend, but I am afraid that I will not be able to find time next week for such a debate. Of course, it is open to him to pursue other means of raising the issue, such as in a Wednesday morning debate. I was not aware of the difficulties that he mentions in Kent county council, but I shall make sure that my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Education and Employment and the Deputy Prime Minister are aware of his concerns.

Mr. Christopher Chope (Christchurch): Will the right hon. Lady ensure that questions that are put down for written answer on a named day are answered promptly at 3.30 pm? I draw her attention to questions that are down for written answer today. Questions 53 to 56 are pertinent to the extraordinary assault on the freedom of the press by the Lord Chancellor at a press conference on Friday. As I speak, those questions have not been answered.

Mrs. Taylor: Obviously, I was not aware that the questions had not been answered, but I shall make inquiries.

Mr. Ian Taylor (Esher and Walton): Will the Leader of the House try to find extra time to discuss the current review of departmental spending and to debate particularly the problems of computers in recognising the year 2000? Each Department was set a target of a full audit by October of this year and most of those should now be well under way. The system should be corrected by December 1998, but the likely cost to the Government of putting this right appears to be rising, to a figure in excess of £1 billion or possibly even several billion. This is not an inter-party problem: it is a recognition that the Government and all private-sector firms face potential catastrophe unless they get their act together quickly.

Mrs. Taylor: I understand the problem to which the hon. Gentleman refers. It has been described as the millennium time bomb and I know that people in the public and private sectors have been looking at ways to deal with it. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary in his Department have been spending a considerable amount of time on it. At the moment, it is thought that the public sector may be ahead of the private sector. I do not think that I can find time for a debate on the matter, but I am sure that my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary has heard the hon. Gentleman and that, if he wishes to raise further points, the Minister will be willing to listen.

Rev. Martin Smyth (Belfast, South): I welcome the right hon. Lady's hopeful suggestion that we may have a debate on Northern Ireland appropriations in two weeks. Yesterday and today, there has been concern throughout the House about the Barnett formula and the possibility of changes. Would it be possible to have a statement this week on that issue, so that the House can be clear that any review will deal not merely with numbers, but, rather, with need?

Mrs. Taylor: I think that the hon. Gentleman knows that, for many years, the Barnett formula has formed the basis for many allocation decisions. Obviously, my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury yesterday put that in the context of the overall spending review that the Government are conducting. He was not announcing specific plans for any change.

Mr. Robert Key (Salisbury): May I repeat my request for an urgent debate on defence, to give the Government the opportunity to clarify the confusion over the future of the Eurofighter and Trident projects?

The Prime Minister said during the general election campaign that Eurofighter was imperative for this country's defence, we have seen Ministers trotting off to Germany, and we have been told again today that Eurofighter is safe; yet, only yesterday, the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) asked the Chief Secretary to the Treasury, during the statement on the spending review, whether the Government were looking at spending on Trident and Eurofighter. We were told that the Foreign Secretary and the Secretary of State for Defence had announced a defence review, which would take six months to complete, but that the spending review would take 12 months to complete and did not exempt Trident and Eurofighter. That confusion is serious for our defence forces and for the defence of this country.

Mrs. Taylor: The hon. Gentleman is making heavy weather of what has been said. I told him earlier that, only this week, the Secretary of State for Defence had had discussions with his German counterpart. The German Cabinet will meet on 11 July to discuss the federal budget. Apparently, the German Defence Minister is in favour of Eurofighter. There is no confusion whatever in the Government's attitude. Defence Question Time takes place on Monday and if the hon. Gentleman wants to take the matter further, he can do so.

Mr. Paul Burstow (Sutton and Cheam): Can the Leader of the House make time available for a statement next week—indeed, sooner if possible—on the industrial action that is about to take place on Connex South Central services, which will cause misery tomorrow to many of my constituents and to many other commuters trying to get into London? Will she draw to the attention of the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions early-day motion 104 so that he can reply to it in detail?

[That this House notes with concern the forthcoming industrial action amongst drivers employed by Connex South-Central; believes this will cause considerable inconvenience to members of the public, disrupt the economy and undermine the efforts being made to raise confidence in rail travel and effect a transfer from road to rail; recognises the right both of Connex to seek changes to working practices and of ASLEF to resist reductions in safety; and calls upon the two sides to renew their efforts to resolve the dispute as a matter of urgency, on ASLEF to postpone any industrial action pending these further talks taking place, and on the Government to put pressure on both sides to reach a sensible and amicable agreement]

Mrs. Taylor: The hon. Gentleman may know that the Government's attitude is that this is a matter for the employer and employees, and not for the Government. Therefore, I do not anticipate a statement at this time. There is a real danger of inconvenience tomorrow, but he will have to recognise that it is a matter for those parties directly concerned.

Mr. Norman Baker (Lewes): May I reinforce the comments of my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Mr. Burstow)? Is the Leader of the House aware that, today, I had 17 pages of cancellations sent through by Connex South Central? Is she also aware that I have spoken to Lew Adams, general secretary of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen—ASLEF—and to the managing director of Connex South Central, both of whom say that they are willing to sit down tomorrow and talk? However, no date has been fixed for talks, trains are being cancelled and commuters in my constituency will be greatly inconvenienced by the strike. Will she have a word with the Minister of Transport, to knock some heads together, because both sides appear willing to talk?

Mrs. Taylor: If both sides were willing to talk constructively, we would not be facing a dispute. I recognise the problems that could be experienced if the dispute goes ahead; and, from what the hon. Gentleman is saying, the people involved might be able to find a way out.

Points of Order

4.27 pm

Sir Nicholas Lyell (North–East Bedfordshire): Madam Speaker, may I raise a point of order, of which I have given you notice? Sir Gordon Downey, the Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards, is a much-respected servant of the House, but he is reported as having given an interview to Counsel magazine recently, in which he is quoted as saying:

"There is quite a strong case for further consideration as to whether or not we would be better off with professional politicians without outside interests."

The House will recognise that such a view is highly controversial and would give rise, if proposed, to serious constitutional issues, which are matters for the House itself or for Parliament. An expression of view on the matter by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards would appear, if—I repeat, if—he has been correctly reported, to sit most uneasily with his quasi-judicial functions. Would you be kind enough to make inquiries and to inform the House of the true position and of any guidance to officers that you think may be necessary?

Madam Speaker: I have noted the concern expressed by the right hon. and learned Gentleman. I have seen the comments made by Sir Gordon Downey and I have been in touch with him. I shall make certain that he is aware of the concerns expressed in the exchanges that have taken place on this point of order today.

Mr. Paul Flynn (Newport, West): On a point of order, Madam Speaker. I seek your opinion on a new and highly undesirable change in the procedures of the House. Yesterday, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister was asked 19 questions, which he was expected to answer in half an hour. During business questions last week, the shadow Leader of the House asked 21 questions and my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House had only a minute or two in which to answer them. The shadow Leader of the House asked 16 questions today.

We are asked to relate business questions to the business of the House next week or in future and to request statements or debates. Of the 21 questions that the shadow Leader of the House asked last week, only seven sought statements or referred to new business of the House. Of his 16 questions today, only four sought statements or debates in the House. It is totally unreasonable to expect my right hon. Friend to provide adequate and intelligent answers to all of those questions. She is dealing with the business of the House: she is not a contestant on "Mastermind".

Madam Speaker: Obviously the hon. Gentleman brought his abacus to business questions. I cannot say that I have been counting, but I shall examine the record. I answered some 10 questions in about seven minutes in my state rooms this morning—I wish that Ministers could do as well.

Mr. David Winnick (Walsall, North): On a point of order, Madam Speaker. I seek clarification arising from your reply to the right hon. and learned Member for North–East Bedfordshire (Sir N. Lyell). I assume that Sir Gordon Downey is in the same position as any other Officer of the House. While I may or may not agree with his observations, Sir Gordon performs a particular job for the House and he is entitled to express his point of view. It would be rather unfortunate if we were to try to gag him and prevent him from expressing his views.

Sir Gordon's role is to try to maintain the standards in public life that the public would like to see observed. While some may disagree with his comments—I do not believe that we could have 650 full-time politicians in the House—

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman is making an observation rather than raising a point of order. In answer to the proper question that he asked at the beginning of his remarks, Sir Gordon Downey is a senior Officer of the House.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): Further to that point of order, Madam Speaker. You have said that you will express concern to Gordon Downey arising from the point of order raised by the Tory ex-Attorney-General, the right hon. and learned Member for North–East Bedfordshire (Sir N. Lyell). Perhaps you could also inform him that the ex-Attorney-General is one of 164 Conservative Members. He is a lawyer and he probably wants another job now that his pay has been docked.

The arithmetic tells us that there are 418 Members on the Government side, almost all of whom will not be involved in consultancies. It is conceivable that Gordon Downey did the arithmetic as well, saw what happened in the general election, and decided that that is the way we should go: one Member of Parliament, one job. The Tories are squealing because they do not have as much money as they had before.

Madam Speaker: As I have said, I intend to make the Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards aware of the exchanges that have taken place regarding this matter.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

4.32 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (Ms Glenda Jackson): I beg to move,

That this House, pursuant to section 9(4) of the Transport and Works Act 1992 ("the Act") as applied by section 42 of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Act 1996, approves the following proposals, contained in an application for an Order submitted under section 6 of the Act by Eurostar (UK) Limited on 23rd January 1997 and entitled The Channel Tunnel Rail Link (Stratford Station and Subsidiary Works) Order, for

(1) The construction, maintenance and operation of—

(i) in the London Borough of Hackney and Newham, a station at Stratford for international and domestic services on the Channel Tunnel Rail Link with vehicular parking and other facilities in connection therewith; railways comprising down and up lines to serve international and domestic platforms at that station; and a station access road off Waterden Road, including a bridge over the River Lea;

(ii) in the London Borough of Hackney, a realignment and improvement of Waterden Road;

(iii) in the London Borough of Newham, a subway at the existing suburban Stratford station with a pedestrian link to the new station; and

(iv) in the London Boroughs of Camden and Islington, railways near St. Pancras to provide access between the Channel Tunnel Rail Link and the West Coast Main Line by means of a connection to the North London Line.

(2) The authorisation of works ancillary to the above-mentioned works, including the stopping-up of York Way in the London Boroughs of Camden and Islington, the making of a means of access to and from that road and interference with waterways.

(3) The compulsory acquisition or use of land or rights in land for the intended works; compensation for this and for the injurious affection of land; and the compulsory use of subsoil.

It may be helpful if I open the debate with a brief explanation of the statutory process and the purpose of the order. Orders under the Transport and Works Act 1992—the TWA—have replaced private Bills as the means by which new railways, tramways and certain other works projects are normally authorised. Section 9 of the TWA gives Parliament a continuing and important role in relation to schemes that the Secretary of State believes are of national significance by making the approval of each House a precondition to the making of an order under the TWA.

If a resolution approving such proposals is passed in both this House and another place, the application will go forward for more detailed consideration at a public inquiry. It would then be for the Secretary of State to decide, in the light of the inspector's report, whether to authorise the proposals in question by making a TWA order. The Secretary of State is not bound so to do. Until he makes his decision, he must keep an open mind on the merits of the proposals. Nevertheless, in reaching that decision, he would take careful note of Parliament's view.

The section 9 procedure has been used only once before, for the ill-fated central railway project which was roundly rejected by the House last summer. I trust that there will be a more positive outcome today.

The use of this procedure in connection with the proposed Stratford station and the twin-track link to the north London and west coast main lines arises because section 42 of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Act 1996 provides specifically for these proposals, in any application for a TWA order, to be referred to Parliament under the section 9 procedure. That special provision was inserted in the CTRL Act with all-party support because the House wished to have an opportunity to give the proposals its formal support in principle. The Secretary of State is not required to form an opinion on their national significance.

The motion accordingly seeks the approval of the House for the proposals. It is phrased in this way, rather than in neutral terms, to enable us to secure a conclusive outcome in a single debate. If the House were to reject the motion, the scheme would, in effect, be dead, as the order could not be made. If the House passed the resolution—as, in this case, the Government recommend—the project would be considered in another place.

Mr. William O'Brien (Normanton): My hon. Friend referred to the link to the west coast main line. I make a plea to her and to our right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to consider a link to the east coast main line—I appreciate that it cannot be done under this order—so that we have a service to all the regions through orders similar to this one. I hope that Ministers will keep in mind the fact that we need the same services on the east coast as are proposed for the west coast.

Ms Jackson: I am sure that my hon. Friend understands that his proposal cannot be debated this afternoon, because it is not a matter covered in the order. However, I shall ensure that his strong representations on behalf of his constituents are brought to the attention of our right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

As I was saying, only if the application is approved in both Houses can it proceed to a more detailed examination at a public inquiry.

I come now to the specific proposals that the House is asked to approve. The detailed case for the proposals will, with your leave, Mr. Deputy Speaker, be presented by my hon. Friend the Member for West Bromwich, East (Mr. Snape). I shall confine my comments to a short summary of the proposals and the representations received on them, and I shall set out the Government's position. A copy of the complete application, including plans and sections of the proposed works and the environmental statement, has been available for inspection in the Library since the application was made in January.

The application for the order was made by Eurostar (UK) Ltd., a wholly owned subsidiary of London and Continental Railways Ltd., which successfully bid for the contract to build the channel tunnel rail link. The works contained in the draft order were not included in the CTRL Act because the decision in principle to proceed with them came too late for inclusion in the Bill without seriously prejudicing its progress.

The proposed station at Stratford will provide a new intermediate stop for international and domestic services using the rail link. It will enable passengers to make connections with other railways services at Stratford, such as the London Underground Central and Jubilee lines, the docklands light railway and the north London and great eastern lines. The station will therefore give passengers a wider choice of access to international and domestic services on the CTRL and make an important contribution to the Government's declared aim of establishing a more integrated public transport system.

The development of the station is expected to create sizeable regeneration benefits for the Stratford area, which is itself a focal point for development at the western end of the Thames gateway. Taking into account the scope for redevelopment of adjoining lands, including former railway lands, and the wider development opportunities in the lower Lea valley and the royal docks, the longer-term extra employment prospects for the area could be substantial.

The other main proposal in Eurostar's application that is closely associated with the Stratford station is for a twin-track connection from the CTRL to the north London and west coast main lines. Such a connection will enable trains to and from the channel tunnel to bypass St. Pancras station and to transfer directly to the north London and west coast main lines, thereby reducing journey times between mainland Europe and Scotland, the north and the midlands. Stratford station would be used as the London stop on those through trains. The twin-track connection would replace the single track provided in the 1996 Act and increase operational flexibility and reliability.

Mr. David Chidgey (Eastleigh): Can the Minister confirm that the promoter's intention is still to complete all the works that she mentioned without further recourse to public funds?

Ms Jackson: It is my understanding, given the contract into which the operator has entered with the Government, that there will be no further call on public funds.

Dr. John Marek (Wrexham): Will the Minister expand on that answer? What will happen if the firm goes into liquidation? Do Ministers have any contingency plans to ensure that works, once they are half begun, are completed, so that the project comes to fruition?

Ms Jackson: With respect to my hon. Friend, he has asked a hypothetical question. I repeat: the operator entered into a commercial, binding contract with the Government. We do not foresee any reason for it to break that contract.

The Department received 59 objections to or representations about the proposed works, copies of which have been placed in the Library. I will, however, summarise the main points raised.

There is concern that the station will cause excessive traffic on the surrounding road network and that inadequate provision is proposed for public transport and cyclists at the station. There is concern also about possible adverse environmental effects on the Bully Point nature reserve, on the River Lea, and about the loss without replacement of garden allotments, recreational amenities and metropolitan open land in the Lea valley, near Stratford.

Some statutory undertakers and local businesses have objected to the adverse effects of the proposed compulsory acquisition powers associated with the works or to the effects of the works on access to businesses by road and rail. Concerns have been expressed also about the adequacy of the design of the proposed pedestrian link at Stratford station. More generally, a few objectors have questioned the demand for a station at Stratford.

The London boroughs of Hackney and Islington have challenged the adequacy of the environmental statement in its assessment of some of the local environmental effects—particularly impacts on local traffic and transport—and the implications of operating additional channel tunnel services for local services on the north London line. Finally, the London borough of Newham has sought certain changes to the proposed planning conditions.

What is the Government's assessment of the proposals? If Parliament approves the resolutions, the Secretary of State would have a duty to decide whether the order should be made. His mind must remain open on that decision, and, in making it, he must specifically have regard to the inspector's report, after detailed consideration of the proposals and objections to them at a public inquiry. The issue for the House to decide today is whether, in principle, the proposals are worthy of proceeding to that more detailed examination. The Government have no doubt that they are worthy.

The objectors have raised a number of issues concerning the perceived adverse local impacts of the scheme on traffic levels, the environment and businesses. Those are matters that, quite properly, must be considered carefully before the order is determined. It will be open to the Secretary of State to amend provisions in the draft order or to change the planning conditions attaching to any deemed planning permission after considering any recommendations by the inquiry inspector. It would be for the promoter of the order to defend the adequacy of the environmental statement and to provide more information for the inquiry, if so requested by the inspector.

The Secretary of State is under a statutory obligation to consider the environmental statement in determining whether to make the order. In the Government's view, the objections do not raise fundamental issues that might dent our confidence in the proposals' overall merits. We are satisfied that the grounds of the objections to the application are of a nature that would be best considered at an inquiry.

We think that the proposed works are desirable in principle. They have the potential to create significant transport benefits by encouraging greater railway use, especially for travel to Europe. A new station at Stratford would also help to achieve a more integrated transport system in London. For local communities in the east Thames corridor, the works offer a real prospect of substantial benefits, with more jobs and much-needed urban regeneration.

The Government therefore have no hesitation in inviting the House to pass the order.

4.45 pm

Sir George Young (North–West Hampshire): The Opposition welcome the order. We give it our full support, and we are grateful to the Minister for her explanation of it.

Debates on the channel tunnel rail link and on Stratford international station have, on the whole, been friendly occasions, involving a small and familiar cast—most of whom I see in the Chamber today, although their places seem to have changed a bit. We will especially miss one player—the Under–Secretary of State for National Heritage, the hon. Member for West Ham (Mr. Banks)—who took part in every debate on the matter. To use a draughts analogy, however, he has reached the end of the board and helped himself to a crown. Understandably, he will not speak in today's debate.

I am delighted that the new Government are proceeding with the previous Government's policy on construction of a high-speed link, thereby harnessing the energy of the private sector in a major private finance initiative, routing the line through east London to achieve the regeneration benefits mentioned by the Minister and making it easier and quicker for passengers to travel from France to regions other than the south-east. I was delighted to hear that the Government will support the order under the Transport and Works Act 1992, thereby making necessary amendments to the original legislation.

The Minister described the effects of the measure, but I have a few questions. The briefing on the order states that construction of the station at Stratford will create jobs and "act as a catalyst" for east London. She mentioned those effects in her speech. At some point, however, I should like to know how the Government plan to reinforce her comments by proceeding with our Thames gateway strategy, which proposes more privately funded river crossings. Our strategy would build on proposals for a Stratford station by further improving transport infrastructure in east London and unlocking some of the large sites on either side of the river.

On road links, which are mentioned in the order, the Minister recently answered a parliamentary question from me, stating:

"no new starts on national schemes are planned for this financial year."—[Official Report, 9 June 1997; Vol. 295, c. 318.]

I should like confirmation that her Department will play its part in building the roads that are necessary not only to make the station a success but to proceed with the regeneration of east London.

There are 56 objections to the works—mostly from organisations preserving their negotiating position—which I know that London and Continental Railways would like to resolve amicably. I should like to know whether any agencies or quangos for which the Minister's Department has responsibility is among the objectors.

In schedule 2, the order also refers to "compulsory purchase and compensation". The Minister will know that two reviews on compensation were in progress at the end of the previous Parliament. One of those—its members were the ombudsman and the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration Select Committee—was narrowly and specifically focused on the relatively small number of households that would be affected by the channel tunnel rail link. It would be helpful if at some point, although not necessarily today, we knew what was happening with that review.

There was also a much broader review of compensation generally, involving a number of Government Departments. Again, it would be helpful to have at some point a timetable and details of the Government's approach to that overall review of compensation.

The Minister referred to one of the objections, which related to the provisions for buses and taxis. The Department's briefing note states that there is provision for 2,000 cars. I am sure that there will also be provision for buses and taxis, as the hon. Lady spoke about an integrated transport policy. I very much hope that the promoter will make it possible for people who arrive by bus and taxi to do so as conveniently as those who arrive by car.

I hope that the Minister will not think it churlish if I say that LCR must be allowed to make profits to carry out and pay for the works that we are debating so that it can deliver its share of the bargain. It has entered into substantial commitments, and needs to make a profit to service the equity that it has to raise. I therefore hope that we will be spared some of the more violent rhetoric that we sometimes hear from Labour Members about utilities that make a profit. The private finance initiative can work only if there is also a private profit initiative.

The TWA order is part of the revival of the railway, pioneered by the previous Government. Along with the Heathrow express, Thameslink 2000, the docklands light railway extension to Lewisham, the Croydon tram link and the Jubilee line extension, it is part of the substantial investment in public transport in London that the Government inherited from their predecessors. We welcome the order and give it our full support.

4.50 pm

Mr. Peter Snape (West Bromwich, East): I congratulate the Minister on the way in which she presented the order. I also congratulate the right hon. Member for North–West Hampshire (Sir G. Young) who, happily for us, now finds himself her shadow. My hon. Friend and the right hon. Gentleman have adopted a non-controversial approach to the scheme, which will bring the channel tunnel project to fruition to the benefit of the nation as a whole, rather than, as some of us feared initially, benefiting only London and the south-east.

I must declare an interest, as I am a member of the National Union of Rail, Maritime and Transport Workers and chairman of Travel West Midlands, a bus company based in Birmingham and a wholly owned subsidiary of National Express.

The application under the Transport and Works Act 1992 seeks to put in place the last significant piece of the legislative framework for the channel tunnel rail link project. It will bring the benefits of the rail link to the widest possible community and, from that point of view, should be welcomed, as it has been by my hon. Friend and the right hon. Gentleman.

The application covers two aspects of the rail link that, at first sight, are quite unrelated. Powers are sought for a combined international and domestic station at Stratford, and for an improved connection between the rail link and the existing railway network in the King's Cross railway lands. However, there is a business relationship between the two.

London and Continental Railways, the promoter of the order, wishes to offer the best possible international service from other major centres as well as London. Its proposals mean that Eurostar trains from, for example, Manchester and the west midlands to the continent will pass directly from the existing network—a modernised network, we hope—on to the rail link via the improved connection which forms part of the application, without having to go to the rail link terminal at St. Pancras and reverse direction there.

Although it is to be welcomed, such a scheme deprives me of a joke, or what passed for a joke when I travelled around the country talking to various interested parties about international services to and from the centres of Europe. The prospect of sitting at St. Pancras station, waiting while the driver walks the length of a 14-coach Eurostar train, is not one to gladden the hearts of those of us who travel from, for example, Birmingham. The fact that the trains will now carry on to the channel tunnel rail link through the new and improved double connection is to be greatly welcomed.

Hon. Members, or the exclusive bunch to whom the right hon. Member for North–West Hampshire referred, will be aware that the original CTRL proposals referred only to a single-line connection from the west coast main line to the CTRL. Although it could have been used operationally, one does not have to be an anorak, as rail buffs are sometimes known, to appreciate that a single line is not conducive to trains rushing up and down in both directions, at least not at the same time. The replacement of that original proposal with the double-line link is to be greatly welcomed.

As I suggested, there will be a reduction in journey times as a result of the order. We are now looking at Paris being only four hours from Birmingham and a fraction over five hours from Manchester. Having bypassed St. Pancras as I outlined, those trains will be able to make their London stop at the new Stratford station. When the rail link and the west coast main line connection are open, more than 20 million people in the United Kingdom will live within four hours of Paris. There is therefore a clear business logic to the application, as well as enormous economic and regional benefits to be had from it. I hope that Members representing constituencies along the west coast main line, those—like me—with constituencies in the west midlands and those, again like me, at least hailing from the north-west will recognise the benefits that will result from the proposals.

Mr. Mike Gapes (Ilford, South): The scheme will be of great benefit to east London, because there are approximately 120,000 unemployed people living within five miles of the proposed station. The scheme will help my constituents and others and will greatly benefit the economic regeneration of east London as well as cut our travelling times to the continent—it will take about two hours and 15 minutes to travel to Paris from Stratford.

Mr. Snape: I am doubly heartened to think that my hon. Friend can take members of his family to Paris in two hours and 15 minutes, but he will have to clear that with the Whips Office under the current regime. He is right to point out the benefits that will accrue to his constituency and to the citizens of east London, an area that has high levels of unemployment. As he says, that problem will undoubtedly be alleviated to some extent.

Stratford is already a major public transport hub, soon to benefit further from the opening of the Jubilee line extension. The new international station on the rail link at Stratford will provide a valuable interchange with the wide range of existing public transport services radiating from there, giving much improved international access to north and east London, Essex, docklands and the City.

With the permission of the House, I should like to pay tribute to many hon. Friends, especially those from the Newham area, for fighting a long and successful battle to get an international station at Stratford. There were doubters in all parts of the House. I was never regarded as a great enthusiast myself, and it is enormously to my hon. Friends' credit that they have sold the area that sends them to the House as well and as successfully as they have. The right hon. Member for North–West Hampshire mentioned the Under–Secretary of State for National Heritage, my hon. Friend the Member for West Ham (Mr. Banks), who, in some respects, is the greatest ham of them all. We appreciate that his new and welcome ministerial duties keep him away this afternoon, but he, too, worked very hard to ensure that the proposals came before us in their current form.

The new station at Stratford will have two further dimensions. First, the rail link is intended to be used by domestic trains from north and east Kent to London, thus improving journey times dramatically when compared to travel via the existing routes. Domestic trains will serve the new station so that passengers from Kent will be able to benefit from the interchange opportunities.

Secondly, the new station will act as a focus for the regeneration of the Stratford area, one of the most deprived parts of London. Under the overall framework of the Thames gateway project, to which reference has already been made, the local authorities—led by the London borough of Newham—are working with local landowners and other interests on the redevelopment of the Stratford rail lands to bring new businesses and new employment opportunities which are so badly needed. The new station will be at the heart of the area.

The right hon. Member for North–West Hampshire mentioned the need for proper public transport links at the new station, especially for buses. I am sure that he will appreciate that the station will have bus and coach set-down and pick-up points well positioned for the station's entrances and exits. Initially, the route to the station will be via the existing access road from Waterden road. Existing bus services could be extended or re-routed to allow for a stop at the station. A full range of services based on the new Stratford bus station will be accessible to passengers using the international station.

The pattern and routing of buses calling at the international station will be determined by development in the area. My hon. Friend the Member for East Ham (Mr. Timms) will take a close interest in that during the building of the station and associated works to ensure that essential public transport links are provided from the outset so that the majority of passengers using the station can arrive or depart on public transport.

Major infrastructure projects usually have an environmental and human cost. I am delighted that this scheme is an exception. More than 90 per cent. of the land is railway land already earmarked for the rail link project and is some distance from existing residential areas. Construction will be undertaken as part of the overall rail link work, for which the House has already given permission, and will not add significantly to the environmental impact.

That is not to minimise the importance of the 56 objections that have been made, but, under the procedure set out in the Transport and Works Act 1992, those objections should be carefully considered and the promoter hopes that the majority of those objecting will have their fears soothed. The comprehensive environmental protection regime already put in place will also apply to this scheme.

[Mr. Snape]

I hope that hon. Members on both sides of the House will support the scheme, which has many benefits. Support for the order in the House will be consistent with the expressed will of the past Parliament, which strongly supported the principle of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Bill in both Houses without a Division. Approval of the order will enable the scheme to go forward for detailed consideration at a public inquiry according to the procedures laid down under the Transport and Works Act.

Those of us who have seen the scheme come to fruition through postponements, cancellations and heartache over the years will be delighted that this is the final piece in this railway jigsaw, to misuse a metaphor. It will enable the great civil engineering project of the channel tunnel to bring proper economic benefits in its wake, as all of us who have been associated with it—as I have been since I was elected to the House—have wanted. Those benefits will come not just to Stratford or to London and the south-east, but to the rest of the United Kingdom. I hope that the House will give that approval without a Division, but, if one is necessary, I hope that we shall have an overwhelming majority in favour.

5.2 pm

Mr. David Chidgey (Eastleigh): I congratulate the Minister on her appointment. It is a pleasure to see her looking at me with both eyes rather sideways, as used to happen in the last Parliament. I wish her every success and I look forward to debating transport issues with her in the coming months. As the right hon. Member for North–West Hampshire (Sir G. Young) said earlier, we have always managed if not to adopt a friendly approach to our debates, at least to stick to the issues rather than concentrating on personalities. I am sure that that will continue.

The Liberal Democrats welcome the order. We are pleased to see significant progress after the many disappointments and postponements that the hon. Member for West Bromwich, East (Mr. Snape) referred to. I hope that we can have an assurance that there will be no further delays as the scheme progresses towards completion.

I do not want to take up too much time, because I know that other hon. Members want to contribute to the debate. I should like to address three key issues, to which I hope that the Minister will respond: Stratford station; the north London connection; and public funding.

I asked the Minister about public funding during her speech. I was pleased that she foresaw no further demand on public resources. I hope that she will not be swayed from that view as the scheme progresses.

The development provides significant regeneration opportunities for the area served by Stratford station, with great potential for substantial long-term employment opportunities. We welcome that. There is an expectation in the Department's briefing that the station will encourage greater use of public transport. The hon. Member for West Bromwich, East mentioned bus links.

The success of the station depends on the quality of the public transport links. There must be a comprehensive set of bus priority measures. I note that the car park has a capacity of 2,000. There must be opportunities for a park and ride or a kiss and ride scheme. I hope, most importantly, that the Minister will do all that she can to encourage the creation of quality partnerships between the local authorities and the local bus operators so that the public are offered attractive, efficient and affordable bus links to the new international station.

The success of the station also depends on recognising the concerns that the local authorities have already set out. I note that the promoters intend to negotiate and try to resolve those problems, but I urge the Minister to use her influence to ensure that the promoters make every effort to resolve those fears before the public inquiry. If there are still objections when the public inquiry starts, the scheme will be delayed, which is the last thing that we want.

The twin-track connection in north London is a short but vital rail link to join the channel tunnel rail link with the west coast main line. A direct, high-speed connection from continental Europe, beyond the south-east of England to the west midlands, the north-west and beyond offers significant potential for economic development, regeneration and growth in tourism throughout England. I welcome that prospect and will eagerly support it.

A number of issues are germane to achieving those benefits.

Mr. Jamie Cann (Ipswich): Will the hon. Gentleman consider the fact that the North London line is already at capacity? I approve of diverting Eurostar on to it, but we ought to consider another method of getting rail traffic across from the west and the east, to Felixstowe in particular, by opening up a few routes that could be cheaply provided, allowing the project to go ahead much more effectively.

Mr. Chidgey: I welcome the hon. Gentleman's comments because they demonstrate the need to encourage Railtrack to make the investment desperately needed to expand our rail network now so that our railways properly serve the nation as the spine of our national transport system. The hon. Gentleman's point is very valid and I am sure that the Minister will take it on board.

We should also use the north London connection to encourage freight services through the channel tunnel to the north of England. We should promote freight services on the channel tunnel rail link via the north London connection to the west coast main line. That is vital in getting the important shift of freight from road to rail.

What consideration is the Minister giving to promoting freight trains through the chunnel up to the west midlands and beyond? Will she grasp the opportunity to create the through-working of freight trains from continental Europe, along the channel tunnel rail link and on to the west coast main line to the north-west? Rail freight could be far more competitive with that opportunity. Are the Government pressing the French Government to accommodate through freight train operations from France to the United Kingdom by allowing freight trains to use the French rail network? Such an agreement would make the channel tunnel rail link much more attractive for freight operations.

I return to the connection between the chunnel and the north of England. It is disappointing that Eurostar services to the north have been delayed until later this year. Can the Minister tell us whether the delay has been caused by Railtrack failing to undertake the necessary upgrading of the rail network?

I welcome the potential for improvements to the North London line. The Minister will, however, be well aware that the line has a poor reputation among its customers. Can she assure me that improvements to North London line services are planned? Will there be improvements in reliability and, most importantly, in passenger safety, as part of the proposals?

The key points are how best to develop Stratford station and how best to develop, through the north London connection, the link between the channel tunnel rail line and the west coast main line. I look forward to the Minister's response.

5.12 pm

Mr. Brian Sedgemore (Hackney, South and Shoreditch): I declare not only a constituency interest, but the fact that I live in the Lea valley and go for walks in the Bully Point nature reserve to which the Minister referred. It is a delightful and tranquil place. Those from Newham who would destroy it are capable of destroying civilisation itself.

The order is part of the fantasy politics of the London borough of Newham. Newham council calls the project "Gateway to the East", but those of us who know the area call it a gateway to hell. Have you ever been to Stratford town centre, Mr. Deputy Speaker? It is an offer that you could certainly refuse.

Every 20 years, Newham council decides to redevelop Stratford town centre in the most environmentally unfriendly fashion. First, the developers remove every blade of grass and every tree, and then they get rid of the human beings. After that, they dig as big a hole as possible, fill it with concrete and put as many cars as possible on it. That is an accurate description of Stratford town centre. When the councillors realise what a ghastly mess they have made of it, they whinge to the Government and say, "Can we redevelop our town centre with more of your money?" That is why we are here today.

I support the speedy building of the channel tunnel rail link, while expressing disgust at the manner in which the route was chosen. Newham council is concerned not so much with the international railway station as with a huge property development which, in 20 years' time, will contain some of the largest, and most soulless and empty office blocks we have ever seen. The council will then whinge again to the Government and ask whether it can redevelop the town centre.

On the question of the number of jobs likely to be created, Newham council and the promoters shame us with what I might describe as perpetual exponential hyperbole. Do you remember, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the old axiom that there are lies, damn lies and Newham council lies? When the debate about developing the station at Stratford began some years ago, we were told that the development might create 200 or so jobs. The figure then rose to 2,000 and then to 20,000. At one time, it was even said that the number of jobs might touch 100,000. The truth?

The truth is set out in some of the documents before the House. The station's construction over two years will directly create 430 jobs and a further 100 jobs are likely to be created from what is described as "associated induced and indirect expenditure". When those people have gone off to the next building site in London, the station operation at Stratford will employ just 70 people—50 for international services and 20 for domestic services. Station retailing will create 30 jobs and a further 28 jobs will be created from what is described as "associated induced and indirect expenditure". That is not a lot. The job hope is all pie in the sky stuff related to huge fat cat property development at Stratford, and it is part of the hyperbolic statistics for which Newham council and its leader are famed.

My main point in speaking is not to speak ill of Newham council, still less of my hon. Friend the Member for East Ham (Mr. Timms), who will, I hope, catch your eye, Mr. Deputy Speaker. My hon. Friend came to my general management committee and got a drubbing from one of our representatives. My main aim is to concentrate on the environmental statement that accompanies the order. For a couple of years, I worked for the Government in urban transport. I can say quite comfortably that the environmental statement is slipshod, shoddy, anti-intellectual and based on unsound methodology. The victims of this appalling piece of work are likely to be the residents of Newham and Hackney.

The only public road access to the station is not through Newham, but via Waterden road in Hackney. It will lead into what is currently a 2,000-space car park, but as the promoters will get 80 acres of land in the area, that could easily turn into a 10,000-space car park. The hon. Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Chidgey) gave it away—my God, what trouble he has created for himself in the House today!—by calling for park and ride facilities.

Both the previous Government and this Government have assured us that the one thing they will not have is park and ride facilities, because that would spew traffic all over south Hackney and through the roads and homes of people who live in Wick ward and Victoria ward, each of which has three Liberal Democrat councillors. Those residents will be pleased to hear that their Liberal Democrat spokesman wants to make their lives a misery for the next 50 years with park and ride schemes. That will be a disaster for Hackney and will lead to far more road building. It will probably lead to the need to start to build dual carriageways to the station.

Mr. Snape: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Sedgemore: No. My hon. Friend made a long speech and I need to be short.

Mr. Snape: I wanted to answer some of my hon. Friend's questions.

Mr. Sedgemore: I have met that one before.

Mr. Snape: You never listen—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael J. Martin): Order.

Mr. Sedgemore: My hon. Friend the Member for West Bromwich, East (Mr. Snape) is getting a bit excited. I know that he is a railway buff and I am keen on railway lines too, but that is no reason for him to think that the lives of people in south Hackney should be destroyed or not properly considered in this House.

Mr. Snape: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Sedgemore: The hon. Gentleman's hon. Friend will not give way.

[Mr. Sedgemore]

The environmental statement does not even consider the effects of the extra traffic on Hackney residents. That is appalling. Worse, it makes no attempt to justify the assumptions used and provides no explanation of how the predicted traffic flow has been derived from those assumptions. There are six people sitting up there. Perhaps they can advise the Minister as to the answers to those questions and explain why assumptions have been made without justification.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman should know that the only people present here are right hon. and hon. Members.

Mr. Sedgemore: You are quite right, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I used to sit up there when I worked in urban planning. That is why I am so excited about the issue.

Mr. Snape: My hon. Friend made a great success of it, too.

Mr. Sedgemore: Actually, I worked in that Department under a Conservative Government.

It would have been possible to make a number of different assumptions about traffic flow. I can think of at least five. First, there could be more car trips from the west, particularly central London. Secondly, there could be more than nine international trains a day and three trains per hour using the station. Thirdly, more than 50 per cent. of international train passengers might use the station. Fourthly, more than 40 per cent. of international passengers might travel by road and fifthly, more domestic passengers than expected might travel by road. Variation in one or more of those assumptions could change significantly the predicted traffic flows. In fact, the environmental statement makes no reference to any of those possible variations.

Worse, the current proposals make no predictions as to the traffic flows that will result from the associated private developments. That leaves a gigantic black hole in the environmental statement, which refers to very small figures and makes no attempt to justify the assumptions it makes, but when one also considers the private developments and the cars travelling not through Newham, but through Hackney, it is clear that a miserable hell will be created for the people of south Hackney if the associated developments are sufficiently successful for the Minister to claim significant job creation.

I shall not oppose the order, but I believe that the public inquiry should closely examine 10 factors. First is the lack of explanation for the assumptions and conclusions used in the environmental statement concerning traffic and transport. Second is the proposed compulsory acquisition of part of Waterden road. Third is the consequential need to improve the rest of Waterden road up to the Lea interchange and the M11 link. Fourth is the loss of allotments with no compensating proposal for their replacement, on the grounds that such loss of open space cannot be justified without replacement elsewhere.

Fifth—a number of hon. Members have referred to it—is the possible need for additional works on the north London line in the vicinity of the connection and Camden Road station to ensure that international services do not interfere with the operation or expansion of local services to and from Hackney and vice versa.

Sixth is the desirability of ensuring that the proposals for the station allow for the addition of a new surface station on the existing line across the Stratford railway lands to serve their development and the channel tunnel rail link station and further their accessibility by and the promotion of the use of public transport.

Seventh is the desirability of an additional access road from the surrounding road network to the station to enable it to be better served by public road transport, particularly buses. I thank my hon. Friend the Member for West Bromwich, East for mentioning that.

Eighth is the possible need to limit or reduce the size of the station car parks to discourage travel to the station by road and to encourage access by public transport, but I fear that the hon. Member for Eastleigh has given the game away. The car maniacs are always there and they always win.

Ninth, the gradient of the channel tunnel rail link west of Stratford station should be examined on the grounds that it inhibits the nominated undertaker in fully meeting the undertaking given to Hackney council in the other place concerning the depth of the tunnel beneath Trowbridge estate.

My tenth and final point is the one on which I started—Bully Point. Will Newham really destroy one of the most beautiful nature reserves in the country and will it make my life, living on the River Lea, a complete misery? Surely not.

Mr. Andrew Rowe (Faversham and Mid-Kent): Coming from a party that has no understanding of internal disputes, I listened with astonishment to the contest that was developing during the speech of the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore). I found it significant that, at that moment, the Minister for sport entered the Chamber, no doubt looking for some gladiatorial contest. I hope that he was not disappointed.

I must be one of the two longest-serving members of the group that wanted a station at Stratford. It may be surprising to some hon. Members to learn that I first became interested in Stratford when I was trying to persuade British Rail that the channel tunnel rail link should have been on a different route from the one that was finally chosen, and that Stratford was a manifestly sensible place for a station.

British Rail and its successor, Union Rail, had a wonderful preoccupation with what they both termed an aeroplane on wheels. They felt that any stop between terminuses was a total economic disaster and the idea that trains might pick up passengers was an aberration. I am pleased that, over the long years during which the project has been coming to fruition, there has been a change in the undertaker, which has moved from thinking that passengers who got on anywhere other than the starting point were a nuisance to at least giving the impression that passengers should be picked up at several places. That is progress indeed.

It is my first chance to welcome the Under-Secretary to her responsibilities, and I do so gladly. I very much hope that her Government will continue the work of the previous Government in trying to ensure that projects of such a size progress rather faster. This one is doing all right. So far, it will have taken only 17 years to reach its projected final date, but the amount of grief that such a time scale causes to large numbers of our constituents while decisions are taken and the blight settles is intolerable. I hope that we can re-establish the all-party parliamentary group on blight, as we were beginning to make progress towards relieving that burden.

I received the information about the order about two days before I saw the newspaper reports that London and Continental Railways' takings from Eurostar were so poor that the company was likely to defer any works and was certainly deferring its flotation. That worried me considerably, so I got in touch with the company.

Yesterday, I had a long meeting with its representatives, who gave me firm assurances that the company is on track for flotation next year. They were confident of finishing the line and making it operational by 2003. They told me that revenue from the Eurostar services, although somewhat disrupted by a French strike two Christmases ago and by the fire in the tunnel last Christmas, are nevertheless sufficient to give them the confidence to go ahead. I wanted to spell that out, as it would be a betrayal of everyone along the route and everyone affected by the proposal if London and Continental Railways was unable to honour those pledges. It gave them to me in the most firm manner.

One of the great advantages of Stratford is that it will allow international passengers to be carried from one end of the United Kingdom into mainland Europe much more effectively than under previous plans. That is admirable. What bothers me a little is that the promoters say that the channel tunnel link will free up capacity on commuter routes. I was gently derided by Conservative Ministers for many years for suggesting that one day the pattern of commuting would change. I cannot believe that the information technology revolution will not eventually have a dramatic effect on patterns of travel to work.

It is interesting that, after those years of derision, British Telecom at least has thought it worth spending a large sum of money on an advertising campaign that points out that it can now provide offices at home for people who currently commute, thereby allowing people to commute either much less often or not at all. I hope that the Government are taking seriously that possibility.

The income repercussions of a marked change in the pattern of commuting will be considerable unless freight is carried on commuter lines. While the channel tunnel rail link may become a profitable venture as a result of the growth of international travel, domestic travel may well become less profitable and commuters may return to the position in which commuters in my area have been for far too long. Commuter services are under-resourced because it is not profitable to resource them. I ask the Minister to take seriously the possibility, indeed probability, that information technology will change the nature of travel to work in the coming years.

I welcome the station at Stratford. It is an eminently necessary and sensible development and, for the life of me, I cannot understand why the previous companies engaged in the operation were so hostile to it.

5.32 pm

Mr. Harry Cohen (Leyton and Wanstead): I welcome the way in which my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions introduced the debate. The channel tunnel rail link will yield big gains to the nation. As much as £6 billion has been estimated. The construction and operation of Stratford station assigns some of those gains to east London. Jobs, regeneration opportunities and significantly improved transport connections are huge benefits which are very welcome. So the station is supported in principle.

However, the project is not cost-free. There is a downside for neighbouring areas such as mine—Leyton, Leytonstone and Wanstead. That downside, in a word, is traffic. My constituency is already overburdened with it, and any extra traffic problems must be considered and ameliorated at an early stage.

The M11 link road remains a bitter bone of contention in Leyton and Wanstead. Promises of improvements for local roads as a result of its construction, which many did not believe at the time of the public inquiries, are already being withdrawn. Rat runs continue in local streets. Traffic delays and congestion on the link road itself due to greater car usage than was originally suggested are acknowledged even before it is built. Leytonstone High road continues to be a major trunk road, even though its part-pedestrianisation was originally mooted. Those broken promises are placing extra burdens on the community.

Traffic associated with Stratford station will upset still further the traffic predictions for the M11 link road. The M11-Lee interchange has been designed to be in balance with the local road network and thereby prevent additional traffic from entering Hackney and Tower Hamlets in peak periods, when the intersection will run at its design capacity. The environmental assessment predicted an extra 400 vehicles per hour—a 42 per cent. increase—on Waterden road in the morning peak. That will lead to huge problems not only in Hackney and on Waterden road but further back down the link road in Leyton and Wanstead.

There will inevitably be pressure to improve the capacity of Waterden road, but that will also mean higher levels of traffic passing through Leyton and Wanstead, including local streets. That will negate the traffic relief that the M11 link road is supposed to provide, especially in Grove Green road, Leytonstone High road and Cambridge Park. My hon. Friend the Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore) made a good point when he said that yet more traffic from the private developments which would follow from the station should be taken into account.

London and Continental Railways, together with the Department of Transport and the relevant boroughs, must make proposals to remedy the problems.

Mr. Snape: My hon. Friend makes a similar point to the one to which I would have replied had I been allowed to do so by my hon. Friend the Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore). I appreciate the way in which my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton and Wanstead makes the point.

Of course traffic is a problem. The promoters have given an assurance that there will be both price and physical constraints on commuter traffic to prevent people from railheading in the way that the spokesman for the Liberal party, the hon. Member for Eastleigh

[Mr. Snape]

(Mr. Chidgey), favoured. So while my hon. Friend's fears are obvious and can be appreciated, they are not fears which can be generated by the order before the House tonight.

Mr. Cohen: I accept that the order will go to a public inquiry. I am grateful to my hon. Friend for those assurances on behalf of the promoters, but boroughs such as mine will want a great deal more than has so far been suggested to deal with the traffic. I hope that my hon. Friend will relay that message to London and Continental Railways.

The environmental statement proposes up to 2,000 car parking spaces in association with the station. No-where in the statement is there justification for that number of spaces. London and Continental Railways should either justify or reduce the number of spaces. Areas surrounding the station such as Leyton and Leytonstone should not be turned into large car parks—certainly not without enormous ameliorating environmental compensation for the area.

Furthermore, there should not be unrestrained increased traffic on Leyton and Leytonstone roads to service Stratford station. Traffic levels on roads into the station need to be kept to the minimum. One way of achieving that is to increase public transport provision into the station. For example, there should be rail services northwards along the Lee valley. Under no circumstances should there be a new road along the Lee valley.

Road access to the station needs to be tightly constrained in order to reduce the damaging environmental effects of traffic in neighbouring areas. That has not yet been properly taken into account.

London and Continental Railways stands to profit a great deal from the Stratford development and the channel tunnel rail link as a whole, but as I have made clear, it is not cost-free. In this private-public partnership, which can benefit all, the cost of dealing with the disbenefits must be met. I believe that they should be met by London and Continental Railways.

5.38 pm

Mr. Damian Green (Ashford): I rise with some trepidation, having heard that some hon. Members on both sides of the House have been fighting these battles for a decade or more. My predecessor was in the front line of many of those battles. He served as Member of Parliament for Ashford for more than 20 years, and one of his most earnest wishes was that the channel tunnel rail link project be built during the equivalent amount of time that he expected me to serve in the House.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for National Heritage (Mr. Tony Banks): We shall have to move fast, then.

Mr. Green: We may have to improve on the speed so far, I suspect.

I join other hon. Members in supporting the works proposed by the Minister. The hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore) gave one of the most negative expressions of support that I have heard for any proposition.

I want to interject a reservation which will be important for the Stratford area. I draw to the attention of hon. Members with constituencies near Stratford our experience in Ashford, which is further down the process because a station has already been built. Our experience of the disturbance, the effects on traffic and so on will prove relevant to Stratford. By and large, it has been positive.

All reservations about the project must be weighed against the fact that the project should be regarded as an enormous asset, both to those areas of the country through which it runs, and nationally. Inward investment and economic regeneration have come much faster to Ashford because of the existence of the international passenger station. The prospect of a high-speed rail link will not only improve transport links to the continent but allow faster commuting to London and beyond.

However, there has been, and still is, an unfortunate degree of uncertainty about timing and starting dates that has had a severe effect on people whose homes and businesses lie in the way of the link and who will have to move when it is built. One of the things that I have discovered in the past few weeks is that many of those people are disturbed by what they perceive as a lack of openness on the part of London and Continental in giving straight answers to straight questions.

We all know that many questions simply cannot be answered at this stage—no one is being unrealistic about that—but I ask the Minister to use her good offices to urge London and Continental to be more open with people, whether in Ashford or Stratford, who are directly affected by the line's construction and the blight that it already causes, by giving more detailed information about dates and projected building times than it has up to now. I hope that London and Continental will regard the passing of the order as clearing a vital hurdle, and that it will use it as a chance to clear up the uncertainties about the timing of construction work that affects so many people, and that will soon affect more in the Stratford area.

I hope that the flotation will go ahead as fast as possible. I was reassured when my hon. Friend the Member for Faversham and Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) said that London and Continental hopes to proceed with flotation next year and then proceed to other building works. I hope even more strongly that firm dates can be attached to the various stages of the project. I congratulate those who have seen the project through so far, and I assure hon. Members that Stratford and the whole east London area will benefit as Ashford is already benefiting. However, the passage of this order must be used to enable regeneration to be accompanied by greater certainty for the business and home owners who are most affected by the line. I appeal to the Minister to use her powers to ensure that London and Continental changes its culture and becomes more open to those people.

Mr. Stephen Timms (East Ham): I am pleased to have the opportunity to support the motion strongly. I am pleased that my hon. Friend the Minister opened the debate, because of her long interest in the project. I commend the role of London and Continental Railways because, as other hon. Members explained, this has been a long saga. The contribution of London and Continental has been imaginative since its participation began. I have also been impressed by the way in which it has entered into discussions with local community organisations about ways of making sure that the many jobs that will be generated by the construction project will be filled, as far as possible, by unemployed people from Newham, Hackney and Tower Hamlets.

I was chair of the planning committee on Newham council when British Rail first suggested that there might be an international station at Stratford. Having aired it, British Rail quickly stepped back from the proposal, but when I briefed colleagues on Newham council about the idea, they were immediately enthusiastic because of the chance it gives to regenerate east London and to bring back economic activity and jobs to an area where thousands from Newham, Hackney and Tower Hamlets used to gain their livelihood and where today only a handful do. We want economic activity to be brought back.

Mr. Charles Clarke (Norwich, South): Does my hon. Friend accept that not only will east London's economic regeneration benefit from the station but that Norwich and East Anglia will benefit from the tremendously improved travel times to London and Europe that will bring us jobs and prosperity? That is why we strongly support the project and the order.

Mr. Timms: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for that important point. The support of East Anglia for the project was an important factor in the campaign's success. I am pleased to see my hon. Friend the Member for Ipswich (Mr. Cann) in his place.

It was while I was leader of Newham council that I first became aware of the views of my hon. Friend the Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore). Most of us understand how to raise issues with colleagues when policies cause concern, perhaps by a letter, telephone call or meeting. He chose first to draw attention to his views through his column in the Hackney Gazette, where he described me as a lunatic. I note that he has been consistent in his views to this day.

Newham council's campaign for the station at Stratford has been extraordinarily popular. My hon. Friend the Member for West Ham (Mr. Banks) is in his place. He is in continual contact with the people of the area because he lives there. Whenever opinion in Stratford has been tested, there has been overwhelming support for bringing jobs back to the Stratford railway lands through this project.

The campaign brought together in a remarkable way the local community, local community organisations, the local authority and local businesses. For that reason, I was especially pleased that the Deputy Prime Minister, in his important speech last week outlining the new Government's policies on regenerating our cities, picked out the Stratford Promoters Group as an example of successful partnership.

Speaking in Tower Hamlets, he referred to the group as a "spectacular success", and said:

> "Let me give you one example from the neighbouring Borough of Newham. Some years ago, the local authority and other local partners brought together the Stratford Promoters Group which lobbied hard and effectively for an International Passenger Station at Stratford . . . That is the sort of partnership I want to see."

He was right to say that it has been a very successful partnership with the local community, and I am delighted that it has led to the success that we are noting today by supporting the order.

There are many people whose role in the campaign has been mentioned. I pay tribute to the right hon. Member for North–West Hampshire (Sir G. Young), who speaks from the Opposition Front Bench. He has taken an interest in the project for a long time. He was much more supportive when in office than some of his predecessors, who were positively unwilling to support the station proposal.

I pay tribute also to the members of the Select Committee who considered the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Bill as it then was, including my hon. Friends the Members for Ipswich (Mr. Cann) and for Pendle (Mr. Prentice). Their conclusion that the station at Stratford was in the national interest was an important step towards the Government's agreement that there should be a station at Stratford.

It is important in east London to bring back economic activity and jobs into an area from which they have long disappeared, in huge numbers. I think that Stratford will be the London hub for the future national high-speed railway network. The Stratford railway land is a 120-hectare site that is important strategically for the future of east London. The international station will have a vital role in attracting development to Stratford, Newham and the Thames gateway as a whole.

Stratford will underpin the importance of London as a world city. We are talking not of a local issue but one that is regional, Londonwide and national. We expect that when the rail land is fully developed, there will be about 15,000 jobs on site. The project will make a huge contribution to the regeneration of east London and to raising the level of prosperity in the area generally. It is a contribution that is very much needed.

I make a request through my hon. Friend the Minister to London and Continental Railways—that it should be willing to work with the local authority and potential development partners to ensure that the plan for the station site and the construction of the station building is of a sort that leads to successful long-term development of an enormous site.

I well understand the pressures that London and Continental is now under, but it is in its interests and those of the local communities that we should ensure that the development of the station itself contributes to the wider development of the site and the prosperity that results from that.

The station will be a great step forward for east London, but there are some important environmental issues still to be resolved. There is no threat to Bully Point. I do not expect to see a 2,000-space car park on that site. These, however, are matters that need to be resolved in discussions between the local authorities, London and Continental and potential developers, and they can be resolved. Let no one in the House underestimate the immense popularity in the locality of the proposal and the widespread support that there is for it.

5.53 pm

Ms Glenda Jackson: With the leave of the House, I shall respond to the debate. It seems that there is a feeling on both sides of the Chamber that the order should be passed. I hope that that will be the outcome of the debate.

The right hon. Member for North–West Hampshire (Sir G. Young), who speaks for the Opposition from the Front Bench, said, if I might paraphrase, that he saw the usual faces in the Chamber for the debate although they seem to represent different areas. The right hon. Gentleman, of course, has a brand-new constituency.

[Ms Glenda Jackson]

I shall link the issue of compensation that the right hon. Gentleman raised with the questions put by the hon. Member for Faversham and Mid–Kent (Mr. Rowe) on planning procedures and blight. Before doing so, however, I thank the hon. Gentleman for his welcome to me.

The Government expect the final report of the interdepartmental group on blight later this year. The draft scheme on redress, which was put to the Select Committee on the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration shortly before the general election, is being considered as to the best way forward.

I thank my hon. Friend the Member for West Bromwich, East (Mr. Snape) for his contribution to the debate, which was especially helpful to the House in detailing what is so important about the order. Without the order, there can be no next step. My hon. Friend highlighted the importance of the development that we are discussing, stemming from his lifelong commitment to and knowledge of the importance of railways. He highlighted, as did my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, South (Mr. Gapes), in an intervention, the importance of the scheme going forward, not least for employment opportunities. The point was highlighted also in another intervention by my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, South (Mr. Clarke).

The hon. Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Chidgey) seemed mostly to be concerned about issues that in essence, if the order is accepted, will be the responsibility of the public inquiry. That theme ran through many of the contributions of hon. Members. Everyone in this place shares concern over environmental issues. There is little doubt, should the order be accepted, that the public inquiry will examine these issues in no small detail.

The hon. Member for Eastleigh raised also the issue of freight and the development of it. In essence, as the hon. Gentleman well knows, the channel tunnel rail link is a high-speed link to carry passengers. If, however, the order is accepted and if the links are made, along with the construction of the station, existing lines will be released. Freight will be able to be carried on the channel tunnel rail link and there will be additional capacity on existing lines.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore), in a typically robust contribution, claimed that he had not come to the Chamber to speak ill of Newham council. May I say to him that he could have fooled me? However, my hon. Friend was mostly concerned about the environment, which is an issue more properly examined at the public inquiry.

My hon. Friend the Member for Leyton and Wanstead (Mr. Cohen) talked also of environmental concerns. He, too, said that we must move away from an over-dependency on car usage, and that is central to the Government's thinking. That can be most speedily progressed by the creation of a properly integrated public transport system.

The hon. Member for Ashford (Mr. Green) took up, in a sense, one of the points made by my hon. Friend the Member for East Ham (Mr. Timms). I have no doubt that London and Continental will pick it up and act on it with some speed. It is important for the speedy development of projects such as the one that we are discussing that there be great openness between the developer and the local communities. Should the order be passed, should the report of the public inquiry advise and should the Secretary of State so order, there must be close working between the developer and the communities.

I take this opportunity to pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for East Ham. I am delighted to see that the Under–Secretary of State for National Heritage, my hon. Friend the Member for West Ham (Mr. Banks), is sitting next to my hon. Friend. I had little doubt that my hon. Friend the Member for West Ham would be here in spirit, and it is more of a pleasure to see that he is here in the flesh, albeit that he has not chosen to delight the Chamber with a contribution to the debate.

We pay tribute to the work, the dedication and the energy which my hon. Friend the Member for East Ham has brought consistently to the project that we are considering. He has never flagged or failed in his belief in the project and the benefits that it can bring to his constituency, to London and to the country as a whole.

If I have not answered any questions raised this afternoon, I shall write to hon. Members. I remind the House that agreeing to the order will not be decisive but it will enable an application to go forward to a public inquiry, with a clear endorsement, assuming that it is agreed in another place, in principle by Parliament. I commend the application to the House and invite Members to approve the order.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved,

That this House, pursuant to section 9(4) of the Transport and Works Act 1992 ("the Act") as applied by section 42 of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Act 1996, approves the following proposals, contained in an application for an Order submitted under section 6 of the Act by Eurostar (UK) Limited on 23rd January 1997 and entitled The Channel Tunnel Rail Link (Stratford Station and Subsidiary Works) Order, for

(1) The construction, maintenance and operation of—

(i) in the London Borough of Hackney and Newham, a station at Stratford for international and domestic services on the Channel Tunnel Rail Link with vehicular parking and other facilities in connection therewith; railways comprising down and up lines to serve international and domestic platforms at that station; and a station access road off Waterden Road, including a bridge over the River Lea;

(ii) in the London Borough of Hackney, a realignment and improvement of Waterden Road;

(iii) in the London Borough of Newham, a subway at the existing suburban Stratford station with a pedestrian link to the new station; and

(iv) in the London Boroughs of Camden and Islington, railways near St. Pancras to provide access between the Channel Tunnel Rail Link and the West Coast Main Line by means of a connection to the North London Line.

(2) The authorisation of works ancillary to the above-mentioned works, including the stopping-up of York Way in the London Boroughs of Camden and Islington, the making of a means of access to and from that road and interference with waterways.

(3) The compulsory acquisition or use of land or rights in land for the intended works; compensation for this and for the injurious affection of land; and the compulsory use of subsoil.

Northern Ireland

5.59 pm

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (Marjorie Mowlam): I beg to move,

That the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1996 (Amendment) Order 1997 (S.I., 1997, No. 1403), which was laid before this House on 3rd June, be approved.

The order proscribed the Loyalist Volunteer Force and the Continuity Army Council. It came into effect on 4 June and is subject to approval within 40 sitting days.

Let me begin by giving some background to those two organisations. The Loyalist Volunteer Force is a breakaway group of the Ulster Volunteer Force. The Continuity Army Council is a name generally used to describe the military wing of Republican Sinn Fein.

We do not take decisions concerning the proscription of any organisation lightly. It might be helpful, therefore, if I put the proscription of these two organisations in the context of a number of appalling acts of terrorism for which they have claimed responsibility.

In March this year, the LVF set fire to the tourist information centres in Banbridge and Newcastle. It was also responsible for arson attacks on the Irish heritage centre in Donaghmore, a school in Newry and Sinn Fein offices in Dungannon. It also in the same month claimed responsibility for planting a bomb in Dundalk town centre. In April, it claimed responsibility for an arson attack on a public house in Aghalee, and in May it claimed responsibility for the murder of 62-year-old Sean Brown, a local member of the Gaelic Athletic Association club. He had been abducted from the club and his body was found beside his burnt-out car in Randalstown. The reason given: loyalist parades being re-routed.

With regard to the CAC, in July 1996, it claimed responsibility for a car bomb left outside Killyhevlin hotel in Enniskillen, which destroyed much of the building. In September, it claimed responsibility for a bomb abandoned in a stolen car in Belfast city centre. In May, the CAC was believed to be responsible for a car bomb in Belfast, which detonated prematurely, injuring an occupant of the car.

Taking into account acts such as those, and judging carefully all the available information against the statutory criterion for proscription—being concerned in terrorism or in promoting or encouraging it—I concluded that, in both cases, that criterion had been fully met. Once that judgment had been made, I took prompt action, as any organisations that are constituted for the primary purpose of carrying out criminal terrorist acts can have no legitimate place in our society.

As a result of the order, it is an offence to be a member of the LVF or CAC from the time that they became proscribed organisations. It is also an offence to solicit or invite any person to become a member of those organisations or to assist in the holding of a meeting to support or further their activities.

Proscription cannot prevent terrorist acts, but it does make life harder for the terrorists. Most important of all, it gives a clear statement of the Government's and society's abhorrence of those organisations. Those who put themselves above the law must expect the consequences. Those crimes serve only to exacerbate divisions and mistrust in Northern Ireland society. Proscription reinforces the Government's commitment to protect all the citizens of Northern Ireland.

Dr. Norman A. Godman (Greenock and Inverclyde): Is it not the case that, apart from all else, members of the LVF have been and remain deeply implicated in the disgraceful, violent picketing of the small Catholic church at Harryville?

Marjorie Mowlam: Yes, there is evidence to suggest that that is the case. I join my hon. Friend and all hon. Members in condemning the sectarian bigotry that we see every weekend at Harryville Catholic church, where attempts have been made to stop people entering, showing their faith and being able to participate in church services. It is an example of how the tensions and the sectarianism are surfacing again in the run-up to the marching season. I join my hon. Friend wholeheartedly in condemning what has been happening there.

We hope that the proscription of the LVF and the CAC will have some effect in showing that we as a House of Commons do not give any credence to such behaviour, and that we shall work in the weeks and months ahead to do all we can to build a society that is based on peace, prosperity and reconciliation for all sides of the community.

6.4 pm

Mr. Michael Ancram (Devizes): The Opposition support the order. We accept that the Secretary of State has shown that there is sufficient information to justify the proscribing of the two groups, which is obviously not a light matter; the decision has not been lightly taken. She gave us a list of the acts that appear to have been committed by both groups, on both sides of the sectarian spectrum, interestingly. The Opposition are satisfied that she had every justification for acting to proscribe them.

As the hon. Member for Greenock and Inverclyde (Dr. Godman) reminded the Secretary of State, it is not just straightforward acts of violence that are carried out by such groups. As he said, we have seen the disgraceful behaviour at Harryville. We have seen other sectarian acts on the other side in relation to the burning of Orange halls and so on, all of which strike directly at the deep rights of individuals, such as the right to worship. It is absolutely correct that we should condemn wholeheartedly those who try to disrupt those basic rights, for which many people's ancestors—on both sides of the divide—died. They are precious rights, and we should certainly take a strong and condemnatory view of those who seek to disrupt them.

The reasons for such proscription must be twofold: first, to bring to bear on such organisations and their members the full force of criminal law, to make it more difficult for them to pursue their nefarious activities; and, secondly, to show beyond doubt the implacable hostility with which a democratic society regards those who systematically seek to use violence in pursuit of political ends. Those reasons for proscription are different, but they relate to the way in which society conducts itself, and it is right that, in those circumstances, proscription is used.

The emergence of those two groups may have been by design, in order to provide cover for acts of terrorism outwith the recognised structures of the IRA or the Combined Loyalist Military Command, or it may have been caused by disgruntled breakaways from within those organisations. Either way, I believe that it is right that the trap door of proscription should now be closed on them.

[Mr. Michael Ancram]

Being sanguine—I think that the Secretary of State recognised this—I do not believe that this act alone will lead to a flood of convictions for membership, or, indeed, to the disbandment of those groupings. The history of previous proscriptions does not give great grounds for over-optimism, particularly in relation to the difficulties of securing sufficient evidence to make charges stick. We all know of the intimidation that is brought to bear on those who on occasion show sufficient courage to give evidence against others in their community for membership of proscribed groups. It is one of those difficult areas where the intention of the order may not in practice turn out to be quite as achievable as we would hope.

I hope that I shall be proved wrong, but history suggests that we should not put too much store by the effectiveness of criminal conviction that might follow such an order. None the less, the order gives an important message and is a positive step. In that context, it is worth reminding ourselves that there are other proscribed groups on the loyalist and the republican side, the most highly organised of which is the Provisional IRA, whose political wing, which is not proscribed, is Sinn Fein.

I mention that because, in the pursuit of peace over the years, that fact has on occasion become somewhat blurred in the minds and mouths of certain commentators and observers, encouraged sometimes by the romanticisation and glorification of those movements on the cinema screen. Just as these two groups are being proscribed by the order because they are terrorist groups, so, we must never forget, is the Provisional IRA. It is an organisation designed and committed to achieve its political objectives through the use of violence, murder, injury and destruction. It must continue to be pursued with the full vigour of the law, just as the two groups proscribed today will be until they mend their ways.

Dr. Godman: The right hon. Gentleman mentioned the romanticisation of terrorist organisations in films and plays, but we should also remember the romanticisation of such people in newspapers elsewhere in the world. When I was in Australia at Christmas, I was appalled to read of events in Northern Ireland and to see terrorists described in broadsheets, not tabloids, as guerrillas. I made my views known to some journalists whom I met when I was there.

Mr. Ancram: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman. Those of us who have been involved in Northern Ireland see a very different side than is often portrayed, as he says, in newspapers and films. We are talking about not guerrillas or freedom fighters, but people who kill, maim, destroy, injure and create devastation to families and communities in pursuit of political objectives, and there is nothing glorious or romantic about that. It is right, when considering the proscription of the two groups today, that we recognise that that same definition applies to the Provisional IRA and to the proscribed organisations within the Combined Loyalist Military Command as well.

Rev. Martin Smyth (Belfast, South): What impact does proscription have on the media who broadcast the words of proscribed groups, saying that they have had a coded message, and at the same time give publicity to those who put hoods on themselves? That does not disguise their body language or their speech. Surely proscription should at least make the media accountable to the law as well.

Mr. Ancram: I am not sure that it is necessarily wise to try to restrict the media by law on occasions such as this, but I take the hon. Gentleman's point, and I hope that the media will recognise the responsibility they bear in this area, and the fact that, if they set out to portray acts of horror and terror as anything other than that, they are themselves helping to create a myth which is destructive to the process in which the Secretary of State and others are involved in trying to bring peace to Northern Ireland.

It is for that reason—we must also look at the matter in this context—that it is right that Sinn Fein, as the political wing of a proscribed organisation, cannot be admitted to the talks process until a genuine and unequivocal restoration of the ceasefire by the Provisional IRA is again in place. That is why the judgment of that ceasefire has to be based on more than just words. Actions will be just as important, as will be the cessation of actions, because, in judging whether a proscribed organisation such as the Provisional IRA is genuine in a ceasefire, it is right that we look to see whether it is still doing things that are inconsistent with a ceasefire. Those which were identified last November, which I understand are still those that the Secretary of State would consider, include continued surveillance, continued targeting and the continued development of weapons, which, in terms of a proscribed terrorist outfit, are simply inconsistent with any declaration of a ceasefire.

Sinn Fein is, of its nature, implicated by association in the violence of the IRA, and no amount of counter-protestation by its arch-propagandists can distort that fact. That is why it is right that Sinn Fein must show a commitment to exclusively peaceful methods and adherence to democratic principles before it can be included in the democratic process.

I can assure the Secretary of State that in the—currently, I have to say—unlikely event of a ceasefire, the Opposition will support her in the most vigorous examination of the words and actions during any ceasefire in order to be satisfied that they show a genuine move away from terrorist violence as a means of seeking to achieve political objectives. Without such vigorous examination and assessment, the confidence to allow a fully inclusive process of talks to prosper simply would not exist.

The order is introduced at a time of great uncertainty and, I think it is right to say, tension in Northern Ireland, when recent acts of violence on all sides, including yesterday's vicious assassination, have given rise to raw sensitivities about the present and apprehension about the future. The order will give some assurance of the Government's attitude to fringe sectarian terrorism, and for that reason I welcome it.

I am sure that the right hon. Lady will agree that such determination is all the better for being balanced and even-handed. She will know the importance of a balanced approach throughout the work that she is currently undertaking, and I hope that she will bear that in mind in her future consideration of other aspects of what she is doing, such as consideration of the North report and her attitude towards the future of the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

It is essential that all parts of the community have confidence at this time that their position, traditions and safeguards are not being unilaterally undermined. I think that the Secretary of State agreed with me yesterday at Question Time on the importance of dialogue and agreement in moving forward. I trust that she will show that in practice in dealing with the thorny issues that confront her because, at the end of the day, confidence building depends on consultation and trust.

To confirm the benefit of the order, I hope that the Secretary of State will take the earliest opportunity to impress upon the new Government in Dublin that confidence will be created and retained only by an even approach to both parts of the community in Northern Ireland, and that any undue indication of sympathy towards the republican cause will undermine the efforts that she must be making to assure the people of Northern Ireland that the political process in which she is involved, and her fight against terrorism, are reasons for confidence rather than fear. She deserves the understanding and co-operation of the Irish Government in that regard.

The Opposition welcome the order. We expect with confidence to see it accompanied by other Government actions consistent with a determination to eradicate the scourge of terrorism wherever it occurs in Northern Ireland and, in that respect, the Secretary of State will have our support.

Dr. Norman A. Godman (Greenock and Inverclyde): To add to my intervention in the speech of the right hon. Member for Devizes (Mr. Ancram), no one who engages in violent activities against a Government in a parliamentary democracy can legitimately be described as a guerrilla. Journalists elsewhere in the world who do that are guilty of the worst kind of romanticism and sloppy, badly researched journalism.

I welcome the order. The right hon. Member for Devizes may be right when he says that such a measure may not lead to any increase in the number of successful prosecutions for violent behaviour. Nevertheless, for a Secretary of State who has been in office for just five weeks, it is in a plain way a strong declaration of intent, and I compliment her on that.

I support what the right hon. Member for Devizes said when he talked about the dreadful behaviour of those who have engaged in seeking to harass—and worse—ordinary people whose only aim was to attend mass at that small church in Harryville. Similarly, the arsonists who have fired Orange halls must be condemned in an identical manner.

The order is a declaration of intent which I welcome, as, I am sure, will ordinary people in the two communities in Northern Ireland.

6.18 pm

Mr. David Trimble (Upper Bann): I begin by offering apologies on behalf of my hon. Friend the Member for Fermanagh and South Tyrone (Mr. Maginnis), who had intended to take part in the debate but was unable to do so because of difficulties in obtaining a flight from Belfast.

The Secretary of State's decision to proscribe the CAC and the LVF was almost certainly inevitable in view of the actions of both bodies, assuming that distinct bodies operate under those names; sometimes one is never entirely sure. Although proscription may not be as effective as one would like, it is necessary in order to show the community's abhorrence of terrorist actions. Consequently, we support the proscription, because it has become inevitable.

The Continuity Army Council has been a problem for some time, as shown by the litany of events that the Secretary of State mentioned, which go back to the major car bomb in Enniskillen in 1996. It is somewhat surprising that that organisation was not proscribed sooner.

The Loyalist Volunteer Force seems to be composed of dissident elements of the Ulster Volunteer Force and the Ulster Defence Association. One cannot be absolutely sure, but the impression one gets is that elements within those organisations who were opposed to the loyalist ceasefire have drifted away from their parent organisations and have been engaged in terrorist activity of their own. That that has happened is to be condemned. It has tended to undermine the integrity of the loyalist ceasefire, which is a matter of considerable regret.

One of the few positive aspects of security in Northern Ireland in the past year is the fact that the loyalist ceasefire has been sustained, albeit with some difficulty. People in those organisations who moved to the position of being opposed to the loyalist ceasefire have made a serious mistake. I hope that, even at this stage, those who have been engaged in such activity will realise how foolish it is. Loyalist violence at this stage simply lets the IRA off the hook. It is completely counter-productive, and is quite wrong. Any loyalist who is currently engaged in violent activity should do some hard thinking about whom they are actually helping.

The Secretary of State mentioned the consequences of proscription, such as prosecution for membership of such organisations. The right hon. Member for Devizes (Mr. Ancram) referred to the difficulty of making such charges stick. That is part of the general problem of prosecuting people for terrorist offences. Why has not more progress been made on the development of a proper, coherent witness encouragement and protection scheme? Some action has been taken on the protection side, but why has more not been done to develop a proper witness encouragement scheme? For years, the RUC has argued that such a scheme is needed. It is a pity that more has not been done about that.

Proscription leads to a number of remedies in regard to fund raising on behalf of proscribed organisations. That is very important. There has been some success on that front, but not enough. We should target the fund-raising activities of the organisations that have just been proscribed, particularly the Loyalist Volunteer Force, which is engaged in racketeering. Some people suggest that racketeering is given a greater priority than the actions in which it claims to be engaged. Close attention should be paid to that, because, by virtue of the proscription, authorities will have the power to investigate racketeering. One hopes that some positive consequences will come from that.

As the right hon. Member for Devizes said, the greatest security threat is still the IRA. It was on a go-slow during the various elections: the election in the Irish Republic, the local government elections in Northern Ireland and the general election. However, the threat is still there. In some respects, the threat is just as high and just as great as ever it was, and people should not be complacent. Vigorous action by the security forces against all proscribed organisations is clearly needed. There is still a general belief in the community that that vigour is not being applied, and that a degree of restraint is still being exercised over the police, the Army and the intelligence services for political reasons because of the so-called peace process. I hope that the Minister of State will make it clear that no such restraint is being applied, and that vigorous action will be taken against all proscribed organisations. We may then see the consequences of that.

People in Northern Ireland were greatly encouraged by the security forces' success against IRA activists in South Armagh a month or two ago. That was noted and deeply appreciated: during the election campaign, many people in my constituency commented positively on that. But it seems to have been an isolated success. I hope that the Government will give the police, the Army and the intelligence services every encouragement to repeat that success, because it is very much needed.

There is no doubt that the IRA will try during the summer to do what it can to destabilise society in Northern Ireland. At the secret meeting of Sinn Fein in the Irish Republic six months ago, Gerry Adams boasted about what it had achieved last summer. He told his adherents that what had happened in Drumcree was no accident, but was the work of his activists over several years. There is no doubt that he and his associates will try to do the same this summer. That is causing tension in the community, and it is not helped by the fact that morale in the RUC is poor. That poor morale is not improved by the comments about so-called police reform, which have not been fully explained to the police or the community. Something must done on those fronts as well.

Proscription is inevitable. We support the order, and we hope that the Government will proceed from this point to ensure that vigorous action is taken against all proscribed organisations.

6.26 pm

Mr. Andrew Hunter (Basingstoke): I welcomed the arrival of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1996, and I strongly supported it during its passage through the House, as I supported previous emergency provisions Acts. In my judgment, the powers and provisions of the successive Acts have been and remain essential, and the Secretary of State's action today confirms that. More to the point, the people who make use of those powers and provisions have consistently reported that they are helpful and necessary. The time certainly is not right to abandon them, as the Secretary of State's tabling of this amendment order and the situation on the ground in Northern Ireland confirm.

The amendment order is brief and modest, but, notwithstanding its brevity and modesty, I welcome and support it. The proscribing of organisations may not be the ultimate weapon in the fight against terrorists, but it is a useful adjunct. In some circumstances, it can be a means of securing convictions, although not as frequently as many of us would like. It certainly sends out the right message that there is no lawful place in a free, democratic society for organisations that believe that violence is a legitimate means of pursuing political objectives.

I have no doubt that the two named organisations deservedly qualify for proscription. Their reported actions show that, and I dare say that intelligence sources also provide further good reasons for their proscription. I applaud the Secretary of State's prompt and decisive action.

When the present Secretary of State was shadow Secretary of State, she sometimes described her position on policy issues as "constructive criticism." I often felt that "constructive criticism" was a euphemism for "opposing politely". Nevertheless, I believe that the Government of the day appreciated her approach, and I shall try to follow her example.

Obviously, this is not the occasion for a wide debate on emergency provisions Acts or on the Government's overall intentions with regard to anti-terrorist legislation. However, it is worth putting down in utmost brevity some markers to which, no doubt, we shall return on future occasions.

The first marker that I want to put down is a bit complicated. It relates to the EPA and the Police and Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1988. I may be mistaken, but in the final days of the previous Parliament, I formed the impression that Labour Members might be thinking in terms of moving beyond the Lloyd review. I based that understanding on the speech of the present Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) when we last debated EPA matters on 19 March. He said then:

> "Lord Lloyd . . . said that many of the procedural provisions in the Emergency Provisions Acts might have taken a different form given the existence of the Police and Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1988. He also said that once lasting peace had been established in Northern Ireland and other parts of the United Kingdom there would be no need for separate Acts: one would suffice."—[Official Report, 19 March 1997; Vol. 292, c. 1016.]

I hope that, in their deliberations, the Government will not lose sight of Lord Lloyd's all-important qualification. In his judgment, the need for separate Acts remains unless there is lasting peace. That, in itself, demands a considerable passage of time after a ceasefire, or we will not know that that ceasefire is lasting.

When Lord Lloyd referred to separate Acts, did he not have in mind the EPA and PTA, not the EPA and the 1988 order, as the present Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland seemed to think was the case? In either event, Lord Lloyd warned against streamlining or amalgamating legislation unless there was lasting peace, and I believe that it would be unwise to overlook that.

My second marker relates to the Diplock courts. Here again, I hope that the Government will not act too hastily. I do not think that the essential issue is whether to contract in or out of a Diplock court system; I cannot see that that really matters. Nor should it be argued—as it sometimes is—that the Diplock court system is a form of inferior justice. The hon. and learned Member for North Down (Mr. McCartney) made that point persuasively in the Second Reading debate on 19 February last year.

Surely the essential issue is whether Diplock courts are still needed—and they are: we cannot yet dispense with them. Deeply though we may regret it, the threat of intimidation, or worse, for jurors or witnesses, is as great as ever. To provide protection would be extremely difficult in practical terms and would almost certainly be cost-prohibitive, in view of the number of people who would need to be protected and the length of time for which they would have to be protected. I hope that the Government will not rush in and precipitately curtail the Diplock system.

For the sake of brevity, I shall refer to the third marker only in passing. It relates to the silent video recording of questioning in the holding centres. The arguments about whether the right balance has been maintained, and about whether we are going too far or not far enough, are well rehearsed, but I feel that silent video recording should be given a reasonable trial. That has not yet happened, and it should before any change is seriously considered.

My fourth marker relates to detention orders. Hon. Members have made their hostility to such orders very clear and the arithmetic of the House is such that, if they so decide, they can proceed. I shall say only that if they seek to remove that lapsed power from our anti-terrorist legislation, I do not think that I will be alone on the Opposition Benches in arguing as persuasively as possible that it would be a dreadful mistake. Tragically, the security position in Northern Ireland demands and justifies emergency provisions and the PTA. That is the reality, which the tabling of the order confirms.

I hope that the Secretary of State has fully grasped one dimension of the security situation in the Province, on which the hon. Member for Upper Bann (Mr. Trimble) commented. A security crisis looms in Northern Ireland today and there is a real danger that it could assume horrific proportions.

Demonstrably, since 1992—and probably some time before that—a key objective in the Provisionals' overall strategy has been the orchestration of confrontation between Unionists and the British state. The Orange Order marches provide the primary vehicle for achieving that, and all the signs suggest that they are succeeding. The crisis will be compounded if the Government unwittingly play into the hands of the Provisionals. With the height of the marching season approaching and tension in the Province rising, the RUC has a pivotal role to play, and the morale of the RUC is a vital consideration.

Mr. John McDonnell (Hayes and Harlington): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Should the hon. Member not confine his remarks to the order that we are discussing?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Lord): The terms of the order are fairly narrow, concerning two specific organisations. Perhaps the hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) will confine his remarks to that order.

Mr. Hunter: In recent weeks, the two organisations that have been proscribed today have been instrumental in creating disorder in Northern Ireland. My point is that it is through the marching season, and the marches in particular, that those who seek to disrupt order in Northern Ireland are working. That is my argument in support of proscription. I hope that the Secretary of State fully appreciates how dangerous the position is, and that he will find means to restore morale within the RUC.

The Minister of State, Northern Ireland Office (Mr. Adam Ingram): We have had a brief but constructive debate. I think it appropriate to acknowledge what all right hon. and hon. Members have said in condemnation of paramilitary violence and sectarianism, from whatever quarter it comes. It is clear that the House is unanimous in that condemnation.

The hon. Member for Upper Bann (Mr. Trimble) asked why we had not proscribed the organisations before. The decisions that we are making tonight must be based on reliable evidence relating to the organisations as a whole, rather than assertions, suspicions or even the conviction of individual members for criminal offences. The evidence available at any particular time has been kept under review, but it is now such that we believe that the Loyalist Volunteer Force and the Continuity Army Council are organisations which deserve proscription.

The right hon. Member for Devizes (Mr. Ancram) made many telling points about other groups that have already been proscribed. He said that proscription of itself would not achieve the removal of those groups from the face of Northern Ireland society, and the evidence tells us just that. Clearly, the best and most effective proscription will occur when those groups listen to what all decent, right-thinking people want for Northern Ireland—when they respond to what the vast majority of people in Northern Ireland want for their society.

The right hon. Gentleman also sought assurances that the Government, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, would seek to ensure that all sectors of this deeply divided community were dealt with sensitively. He made some telling points. I think that, overall, he recognised that that was indeed the way in which the Government and my right hon. Friend had proceeded during the weeks in which we have been in office, and that we would continue to proceed on the same basis.

The right hon. Gentleman rightly commented on the need for the new Dublin Government to adopt an even-handed approach to the position in Northern Ireland. We worked well with the last Dublin Government and we look forward to building a constructive and progressive relationship with the new Government and those who will speak for them in the peace talks. I hope that the right hon. Gentleman will accept those assurances.

Mr. Robert McCartney (North Down): I had intended to speak in the debate, but, because of a mechanical problem, I was unable to do so. As I was rising to my feet, an hon. Member was entering the Chamber and I did not manage to catch your eye, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I think that, by convention, a lengthy intervention on the Minister's winding-up speech will be entertained.

I welcome the proposed order proscribing these two organisations. They are splinter groups—one, I understand, from the Combined Loyalist Military Command and the other from the IRA. However, it would be wrong to think, as I am sure the Minister will agree, that proscription is any sort of panacea for the type of activity in which those organisations engage.

One of the problems has been that democratic process attempts to come to terms with violent terrorism have not worked. It is clear that democracy cannot co-exist with violent terrorism with political objectives. As I am sure the Minister will agree, the inevitable outcome of the over-exposure of democracy to terrorism is that democracy itself is first corrupted and is then capable of being subsumed by that terrorism.

Perhaps the Minister should be aware that the peace process policy, which was to some extent created by the previous Government, but which has been endorsed and subsequently adopted by the present Government, has itself brought about many of the problems that the Government have to deal with.

The Government will be attempting to deal with two particular objectives that are mutually exclusive. The first is the holding of a peace resolution conference with the plenipotentiaries of violent terrorism and the other is the bringing about of a negotiated stable political settlement in Northern Ireland. The more that the Government attempt to achieve the former, the less they make available the prospects of the latter. While they may help, perhaps more cosmetically than substantively, it would be foolish to think that they will make a great contribution to the elimination of terrorism in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ingram: I appreciate the hon. and learned Gentleman's points. Perhaps his last two strayed a little from the order. He said that proscription of itself would not achieve the desired end result. I made those very points at the start of my speech.

The hon. and learned Gentleman's name appeared on the annunciator during his intervention, which is most unusual. Perhaps new things are happening in Parliament—new Labour, new screens. We shall have to learn as we go along. However, I take on board the hon. and learned Gentleman's points, and I have no doubt that we shall return to them in later debates.

Before that intervention, I was replying to the speech of the right hon. Member for Devizes. I dealt with his comments about the need for sensitivity in the context of relationships throughout the Province's divided community. He also spoke about the new Government in Dublin. I am sure that we all want to see that Government work progressively towards the achievement of peace in Northern Ireland.

The hon. Member for Upper Bann spoke about the witness protection scheme. That goes beyond the thrust of what the order seeks to achieve. Obviously, we shall reflect on what he said. Perhaps if I write to him on the detailed point, that will help him and other hon. Members.

The speech of the hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) was wide-ranging. We are debating the narrow issue of the proscription of two paramilitary organisations and, while it is not for me to say that any hon. Member strayed beyond the bounds of the order, you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, had to call the hon. Gentleman to order. He raised several issues, including the functioning of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1996, the Lloyd review and the Diplock courts. He made some constructive criticisms, but perhaps it is better to deal with the hon. Gentleman's specific points when we debate those aspects in terms of the Government's legislative programme. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will raise many of those issues again, when the House will be able to deal with them at greater length and on a more structured basis.

My hon. Friend the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow—I apologise. Perhaps I have gone native in Northern Ireland and have forgotten my homeland of Scotland and its constituencies. I hope not. My hon. Friend the hon. Member for Greenock and Inverclyde (Dr. Godman) spoke about the disgraceful scenes in Harryville. Today, I took the opportunity to go through the town of Harryville and I saw the church that is being repaired as a result of the weekend's events. We must all condemn what is going on there. It is simply outrageous. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State spoke about the way in which attempts are being made to stop people who are going about their lawful business or following their religious persuasions and attending church.

The speeches in the debate will contribute to a better understanding of the situation in Northern Ireland. My final point relates to the speech of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in opening the debate. Of itself, proscription cannot guarantee the prevention of terrorist acts, but it will make life harder for the terrorists.

For example, it will be illegal to solicit, invite or accept financial or other material support for the LVF or the CAC or knowingly to contribute to them. The order will make it illegal to solicit or invite membership of those organisations or to solicit or invite a person to carry out orders or directions given on behalf of the LVF or the CAC or requests made by a member of either of them.

It will also be illegal to arrange, manage or address a meeting knowing that it is to support those organisations or that it is to be addressed by a member of them. Finally, it will be illegal to dress in any way that arouses the reasonable apprehension that a person is a member of either of those organisations.

The effects that flow from the proscription of an organisation are not retrospective. Therefore, a person may be prosecuted for activities only if any of the above offences occur after the date of proscription. People know the purpose of the order, and I commend it to the House.

Question put and agreed to.

Mr. David Heath (Somerton and Frome): This is a particularly timely debate in more ways than one. I am surprised to be addressing the House at such an early hour. As the Minister will appreciate, the debate is timely because of the announcement of the capping of Somerset county council a couple of weeks ago. It will come as no great surprise to him to hear me say that the capping announcement was a considerable disappointment to the many people I represent in Somerset and those in the wider county. They had hoped, perhaps in vain, for rather better from the new Government.

The county council will decide within the next week whether it wishes to appeal against that capping designation. I have a strong suspicion that it will decide that it will wish to appeal. If I am right, it will certainly have my support and that, I believe, of the other Members of Parliament representing Somerset. We will support the county council, because we believe that it has an extremely strong case.

That is not a surprising statement. All councils believe that they have a strong case to spend more. I have sat through enough meetings of the Consultative Council on Local Government Finance and other consultative bodies to know that the arguments that go backwards and forwards between local and central Government tend to be a little stereotypical and to be rehearsed in detail each year, but I honestly believe that there are good reasons why Somerset's case merits close consideration.

The first is that there is no doubt that Somerset county council is extremely badly treated by the formulae. Remember that, this time around, Somerset was given a capping limit of 2 per cent., the lowest of all the county authorities. Remember also that the amount that Somerset county council has budgeted to spend in excess of that limit is marginal in its context—a further 1.2 per cent and a total of £3.6 million.

Secondly, the county council has an extraordinary record of efficiency and prudence in the way in which it conducts its business, and we can substantiate that. Thirdly, the areas in which that money is be spent are precisely those that the new Government claim are their priorities over coming years. The county council has made it clear that its interests and priorities are to protect frail and elderly people, to provide a proper education for our children and to maintain the safety of citizens in Somerset. Those are, I hope, aspirations that the Government share.

Let us deal with the formulae. Somerset is not a high-spending authority. There are no aspects of county spending to which people can point and say, "There is an authority that spends over the top on its services." They can say, of course, that Somerset spends more than its standard spending assessment allowances. Were that not true, the county would be in a parlous state. It spends £12 million more than the education SSA. Despite that, its education spending is still 4 per cent. below the Audit Commission family average. No one who has visited Somerset schools and who knows the Somerset education service would believe that Somerset is a high-spending authority in terms of education.

[Mr. David Heath]

Why, then, is the SSA so inadequate? Technical issues need to be considered. They are based on sparsity factors and the rural nature of Somerset, which falls between all the measures that are reflected in the SSA. The SSA fails to reflect properly the growth not only in the population but in the clientele in the most important sectors—the number of children in school and the number of elderly persons and persons needing support from the social services departments.

Therefore, the SSA is at fault; and then we have the area cost adjustment. Were the right hon. Member for Bridgwater (Mr. King) here, I am sure that he would want to intervene at this point to say how important it is that the area cost adjustment be reviewed. He has consistently held that view from the moment that he ceased to be a Minister with responsibility for the environment.

Other factors, such as the landfill tax, weigh heavily on a county such as Somerset, which has no realistic alternatives because—again—of the sparsity of the population. It faces a substantial imposition in terms of the landfill tax, without the room within the capping formulae to provide.

Remember that a previous Government already considered an appeal against capping designation by Somerset in 1995–96 and, wonder of wonders, they agreed with us. Somerset is the only authority that has ever successfully gone through the cap and been granted every penny that it asked for. The formulae were clearly out of step with the county's needs. In that year, the council was granted an extra £2.6 million, which represented a 1 per cent. addition to its expenditure.

Let us consider the efficiency and effectiveness of the authority's education service. Somerset has the lowest administrative costs of any authority in the country—£9.29 per child; some authorities spend more than £120 per child. That is out of all proportion, and shows the level of the education service's effectiveness and efficiency. Somerset has the highest proportion of spending devolved to schools and, as I have mentioned, the highest spending above SSA of any county. It also has the lowest proportion of surplus places in primary schools. Given that we have many village schools and schools that are monopoly providers for the area they serve, that is a remarkable achievement.

The maximum amount of money that is provided from Government is going to our schools, yet our schools still suffer from underfunding. Class sizes have been steadily increasing. Last year, before the general election, I was the first Somerset education committee chairman in eight years to propose a budget that did not involve real-terms cuts, which is remarkable, but that depended on the county council being allowed to spend above the capping designation.

Social services are equally important. Somerset was one of the first counties to externalise its residential care service and it is the only one to have externalised domiciliary care. That may be right or it may be wrong, but what is absolutely certain is that the results are very low unit costs and very low management and support costs. That has just been checked by the Audit Commission and the social services inspectorate and it is demonstrably the case. Again, the fire service has among the lowest costs in the country, yet it is one of the most efficient brigades in terms of its call-out response time. Expenditure on highways maintenance, which is among the lowest in the country, has now been put into education.

All that means that the county is operating extremely effectively. There is no spare money. There is no scope for using reserves, as some authorities might, because there are no reserves. There have been no reserves for many years. Few—one can never say never—further administrative savings can be made within the county. The results of cutting real-terms expenditure are cuts in the services that people in the county need.

Where, therefore, will the extra £3.4 million of expenditure go? Is it to be frittered away? Of course not. It is to go in the main to education—an extra £2 million. Here I must declare an interest. I have two children in a Somerset school. They will be affected by the proposals. They will certainly be affected if the Government impose the capping limit.

I have mentioned that class sizes have increased. In 1995, 24.9 per cent. of primary classes in the county contained more than 30 children; in 1997, the figure has gone up to 31.6 per cent. We are not crying wolf. Those are real affects in our schools. As I have said, this year, we have a standstill budget, but what if the designation is confirmed? It will mean 90 teachers will lose their jobs. How do the Government reconcile that with the priority of education, education, education? How would they find the extra £1 million that will then have to be spent on redundancies, to sack teachers, instead of paying for more teachers for a better education for our children?

The rest of the money totals £1.4 million, which is to go towards social services. Already, we have limited support in the county for carers. Already, domestic support to the frail and elderly has been cut. Already, the home care service has been cut. If the designation is confirmed, 125 places for elderly people in care homes will be lost and 50,000 hours of personal care for the frail and elderly will be lost. The child care team will also be cut.

No caring council would contemplate making such cuts, and I suggest that no caring Government would contemplate enforcing them. I know that the Minister is a caring man: I am sure that he will consider my comments and listen to the representations made to him. I hope that he will not take it the wrong way when I ask him not to recite the brief to which he referred in replying to a similar debate on Oxfordshire several weeks ago. Parts of that brief seemed a little stale: perhaps they predated the change of Government and were written by the same civil servants. Perhaps the policy was a left-over from the previous Government.

I hope that the Minister will consider the realities of Somerset and its case. I hope that he will remember that the rationale for capping is to protect the public from irresponsible authorities and from excessive council tax increases. Somerset has a very low council tax compared with those of neighbouring authorities. It is not an extravagant authority, and there are no easy alternatives to be taken.

Who is being protected? Last week, I asked the Minister in a written question how many representations he had received from people in Somerset complaining about their council tax bills this year. The answer was none: not a single person from Somerset has complained about his or her council tax. However, many people have written to say that they do not want cuts in education, social services or the fire service.

The Conservatives assisted us in the last county council election by opposing going through the cap, thereby presenting a clear alternative to the people of Somerset. As a result, the Liberal Democrats won by a massive margin and the Conservatives made very little progress. Therefore, like the Government in this place, the Liberal Democrats have a mandate in Somerset.

I ask the Minister to consider matters of local accountability. The Government have just signed the charter of local self-government. Let the Minister prove that he believes in self-government by allowing local people the discretion to make local decisions about local services and what they are prepared to pay for them. That will not affect the departmental totals; it will affect the total spend, but, as far as I know, that has not been capped. It will not affect the Department's contribution to local authorities, but it will allow the county of Somerset to offer a fair deal to our children and our elderly.

I hope that the Minister's reply will not involve further reviews of sparsity, area cost adjustments and the SSA system. The children of Somerset cannot wait for those reviews to take place. It is a truism that children have only one chance at education. If the council is forced to sack teachers, it will have a devastating effect on the children in Somerset schools now—next year, the year after, some time or never will be too late for those children. The Minister has an opportunity to make a real difference to the services provided in Somerset. I urge him to seize that opportunity in responding to the debate and, more important, in responding to those representations that I fully expect him to receive from the county of Somerset in due course.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (Mr. Nick Raynsford): I congratulate the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Heath) on his success in securing the Adjournment Debate this evening and on his powerful advocacy of his county council's case. He has put a strong and eloquent case, and I acknowledge his concern for the interests of his constituents and others in the county.

The hon. Gentleman will not be surprised to hear that my reply will inevitably reiterate many of the points that I made to the hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Dr. Harris) during last week's debate. We are considering broad principles concerning the operation of local government finance that apply equally to Somerset and Oxfordshire county councils.

First, I shall make some general points about the new relationship between central and local government. As the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome mentioned in his speech, last week we signed the Council of Europe's charter of local self-government. That is a clear pledge of the Government's commitment to forging a new and constructive partnership with local government at home. Local government has a central role to play in tackling the neglect and mistakes of the past 18 years.

We recognise, and believe in, the importance of local government as an independent democratic institution. We want to reinvigorate local government in ways that encourage increased democracy, with local people having more say in the affairs of their council; increased autonomy, with more freedom for authorities to take their own decisions; increased accountability, with elected representatives being more visibly accountable for their actions; and increased partnership between central and local government and between local authorities and people, businesses and groups in their areas.

Within that framework, local authorities have important roles as commissioners and deliverers of a wide range of local services, of which education—which the hon. Gentleman described in considerable detail—housing and social services are often seen as the most important. Authorities are responsible for assessing service needs, balancing priorities, procuring delivery of services and providing them directly, monitoring standards, reviewing performance and acting on complaints.

However, local authorities are concerned with more than simply ensuring the delivery of high-quality services. We want to see local authorities develop their roles as leaders and champions of their areas: identifying local problems and areas of concern and developing strategies to address them; bringing groups, businesses and agencies together; and being the voice of local communities in dealing with Government, Europe, investors and other interests.

Local government is at the sharp end of the fight against deprivation. The Government will join local government in a concerted attack against the multiple causes of social and economic decline—social exclusion, unemployment, bad housing, crime, poor health and environmental problems. Good local government can play a key part in tackling those serious and deep-rooted problems.

Equally, we recognise that poor local government will stifle improvements not just directly in terms of the services that an authority provides, but by imposing an excessive cost burden on the community and creating a vacuum of community leadership. We therefore need to work with local government to ensure that people receive good-quality services from the whole of the public sector.

We also need to work together in developing our policies for local government. It is essential that we work together to create systems that work, and have detailed discussions about policy and implementation before we enact legislation. We want to forge close links with local government and related organisations that can make a real contribution. We want to see practical experience and knowledge brought to bear at the early, formative stages of policy development, and not left to the end of the process, when minds are made up and the scope for change is limited.

We have all had too much experience recently of central Government legislating in haste, and local government having to live with, and sort out, the problems that followed. We must now start to work together on future legislation. We must examine ways in which we can develop pilot studies on a wide range of issues including best value, a new approach to regeneration, community planning and partnerships with other agencies and democratic innovations.

We must—and intend to—work together to assess the scope of the new duty on local authorities to promote economic, social and environmental well-being in their areas, and on ways in which we can strengthen local authorities' community leadership role, facilitate innovation, and encourage local partnerships in the delivery of services. Of course, we must work closely with local government in order to implement our manifesto commitments on local government finance.

As to this year's settlement, all public expenditure programmes must be examined rigorously each year, and local government spending—which accounts for a quarter of all public expenditure—is no exception. Decisions on local government spending must take account of the pressures on local authorities and of the scope for greater efficiency and effectiveness within those authorities.

As I have stressed on other occasions, we have inherited this year's local government spending plans and are clearly committed to retaining them. Although we are committed to reviewing the local government finance system in future years, for this year at least we must work within the current spending plans.

Mr. Tom King (Bridgwater) rose—

Mr. Raynsford: The right hon. Gentleman has just entered the Chamber. He cannot expect me to give way when he has not heard the opening speech by the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome and has had little opportunity to listen to my comments. I have made it quite clear that we inherited the local government spending arrangements.

Mr. King rose—

Mr. Raynsford: I have already said that I am not prepared to give way to the right hon. Gentleman, who was not present for the speech by the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome.

Mr. King: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Can you confirm that this debate is entitled to run until 10 pm? The fact that the Government's business has collapsed does not affect that, so I hope that the Minister will reflect on that fact. I want to make only a brief intervention and I had already asked the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Heath) whether I could intervene. I happen to be a Somerset county Member. It would be unfortunate if the Minister, who is aware that the debate could continue until 10 pm, chooses not to allow me to make my brief intervention. I hope that he will feel able to accommodate me.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Lord): Whether hon. Members give way is not a matter for the Chair—it is entirely a matter for the Minister.

Mr. Raynsford: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I have made it clear to the right hon. Member for Bridgwater (Mr. King) that I am not giving way, and I shall explain why. He knows that this is a short debate and he is aware of the convention on Adjournment debates. The hon. Member for Somerton and Frome had the courtesy to tell me, before the debate began, that he had received a request from the right hon. Gentleman to intervene. Had the right hon. Gentleman been in the Chamber for this debate, I would have been happy to agree to that. However, he was not here. He did not have the courtesy to come to the Chamber and listen to the speech of the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome. Instead, he has come here 20 minutes after the start of the debate and expects to intervene, even though he has not listened to any of the comments of the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome and shows no interest in listening to what I have to say. I consider that to be a considerable discourtesy. The right hon. Gentleman, who has many years of experience in the House, should know better.

The hon. Member for Somerton and Frome introduced the debate in an intelligent, sensible and courteous way. He made a number of points about standard spending assessments. Since 1990–91, Somerset's overall SSA has increased broadly in line with the average increase for English authorities. For 1997–98, its SSA has increased by 1.9 per cent., which is only just below the average increase for shire counties and is well above the average 1.5 per cent. increase for English authorities as a whole.

The hon. Gentleman reasonably raised the question of the education SSA. He made a valid point, because Somerset's education SSA is relatively low compared with that of other counties—it is 33rd out of the 35 counties. It was an entirely proper point for him to make. However, what he did not say was that, on a number of other SSAs, Somerset does relatively well—for example, on highways maintenance it comes fourth out of the 35 counties, on other services 11th, and on social services 15th. We acknowledge that the case he made on education is valid, but it is only a partial case that relates to only one service; it does not take account of the broad range.

The hon. Gentleman will understand that the framework for SSAs involves assessments of the need to spend under various headings. Those needs vary from authority to authority. Authorities will do well on some, but less well on others. That reflects the circumstances in their areas and the need for them to spend in relation to other authorities. That is why it is possible for an authority to score relatively low in relation to other authorities on some indicators, but to score relatively well on other indicators. That is the case with Somerset.

Mr. David Heath: I am sure that the Minister agrees that the education SSA and the revenue that derives from it is so large in comparison with the other services provided by a county council that, if the education SSA is wrongly assessed—especially to the degree that I think the hon. Gentleman almost recognised in his comments—that has an effect on every other service, as well as on the level of education that the county hopes to provide.

Mr. Raynsford: The hon. Gentleman makes a perfectly valid point. I have no doubt that, as and when the county seeks to make representations, that will be in the forefront of the issues raised. We shall listen carefully to any representations from the hon. Gentleman, his colleagues in the county council and others.

SSAs are the basis for the distribution of revenue support grant. They are based on measures of spending need that apply to all local authorities and they are discussed with representatives of local government. The SSAs for 1997–98 have been announced. As with total local government spending plans, we have said that they will not be revisited, and we do not propose to do so now.

Having said that, we are committed to a fair distribution of Government grant among authorities, and we believe that there is scope for improvement in the arrangements in future years. My colleagues and I shall look closely at the current SSA system. We shall listen to local government views on how SSAs might be improved, both for 1998–99 and in the longer term.

As the hon. Gentleman feels that the SSA system does not treat Somerset fairly, I should be happy to examine any proposals he has for different methods of calculation. However, as I pointed out to the hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon last week, any system of this nature has to be universal, and any changes would need to apply to all authorities equally. When making any changes, we will, of course, want to be sure that they will produce a sounder assessment of needs.

Mr. Tom King: I want to apologise to the Minister for my earlier intervention. I am grateful to him for his courtesy in giving way now. He, too, is a long-serving Member, so he will understand that there is a problem when business collapses ahead of time. I merely wanted to point out that there is concern about the area cost adjustment. We made representations to the previous Government and a study was set up. Unfortunately, the basis on which it went forward led to an unhelpful result and we were then forced to ask for the study not to be implemented.

I apologise again to both the Minister and the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome for my inadvertent discourtesy in not being here at the start of the debate. I would be grateful for advice on what work is being done. I hope that the Minister or his colleague, the Minister of State, will receive a delegation of Somerset Members of Parliament who wish to press the urgency for a fresh approach to the ACA formula, which is so important in determining the overall level of expenditure for Somerset.

Mr. Raynsford: The right hon. Gentleman makes a valid point and I am happy that I allowed him to intervene. My previous comments related solely to the way in which his earlier intervention arose. I recognise that he has represented the area for a long time and has been involved in the issue of area cost adjustment, which has produced some curious consequences. The issue is complex, like many other elements in the local government finance scheme. Many of us start off with high hopes of achieving significant improvements. We set out our proposals, only to find that the consequences are very complex and often not as helpful as we had hoped.

It is a difficult area. I take the right hon. Gentleman's point about the need to re-examine the issue. If he and other hon. Members seek a meeting with either me or the Minister of State, we shall be glad to hear their representations.

With regard to capping, we again gave clear signals that, although we propose to replace in due course the current crude capping system, it would have to wait for future years. In the meantime, we said that we were proposing to follow the intentions of the previous Government for 1997–98. All authorities, including Somerset county council, knew that when setting their budgets.

The hon. Member for Somerton and Frome said that there was disappointment in the county council at our decision. It may have been disappointed, but it cannot have been surprised, because it was made clear that this year's local government framework was inherited and that the caps would apply.

Mr. David Rendel (Newbury): I was present at the debate on Oxfordshire last week. I have heard the Minister's remarks so far tonight, although I am afraid that I did not hear all of the speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Heath). The Minister has said once again that he is relying on the previous Government's plans in respect of both Somerset and Oxfordshire. There has been a strong indication from Conservative Members that, had they remained in government, they would have listened very carefully to representations made by Somerset and by Oxfordshire, and that they probably would have agreed with them. Will the Minister do the same?

Mr. Raynsford: The hon. Gentleman would be showing surprising naivety if he believed Conservative Members' protestations that they would act differently if they were still in government. It is very easy to repent after the event, and I am sceptical about such blandishments. The Government, however, will listen very carefully to the specific representations that we expect to receive from the counties of Somerset and—after last week's debate—Oxfordshire. We shall also do our best to accommodate sensible proposals for changes in the system that may help in future, and we shall listen to the authorities' case on this year's settlement.

Of 436 authorities, only three have set budgets that are significantly over their provisional capping limits. Our decision to designate those authorities demonstrates that we are taking our spending commitments seriously. We have also made it clear that, under our plans for replacing the current capping system in future, we shall retain reserve powers to control excessive council tax rises. Therefore, this year, all three authorities will be required to reduce their budgets unless they can demonstrate to us that they should not.

Under the capping legislation, capping principles apply to classes of authority, and we can consider an individual authority's detailed circumstances only if it budgets over cap. Somerset county council, having been through the process before, is well aware of that principle. The county was granted a capping concession on the previous occasion, in 1995–96—the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome said that it was a unique achievement—when, after making its representations, it was granted a concession of £2.6 million. That concession led not only to relief in that financial year but to a permanent increase in the authority's base budget, from which it continues to benefit.

This year, Somerset was allowed to increase its budget by 2 per cent. On the information available, there is nothing to suggest that Somerset is in a tougher position than counties that have budgeted within cap. The hon. Member for Somerton and Frome made the point that, in his opinion, Somerset was allowed the smallest cap increase of any authority. I do not think that that is correct, however, because many other counties received a 2 per cent. increase, and many other local authorities received 1.5 per cent. Therefore, Somerset was not alone in its increase.

As I said, the Government do not believe that Somerset is in a tougher position than counties that budgeted within cap. Our proposed cap would still allow the county to increase its budget by £5.58 million over its 1996 budget, when it fixed a budget that was within its cap. On the evidence that we have received to date, we think that that is a reasonable and achievable goal. As I said, however, we welcome and will listen carefully to any representations made by the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome or by Somerset county council.

Decisions on priorities between services is a matter for the authority itself. I accept entirely the importance that the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome attaches to education, because the Government have a similar concern for education. I am sure that he will accept, however, that it would be wrong for central Government to say how it believes authorities should divide their spending, because that is a matter for local authorities. It is not for me to suggest where authorities should make any reductions if their cap is confirmed. Local authorities would quite reasonably object if we attempted to dictate in such a manner.

At this stage in the capping process, authorities can accept the caps that we have proposed. When that happens, the cap limit is set by notice, and the authority can immediately set a revised lower budget and recalculate its council tax. Obviously, sending new bills will impose an extra administrative burden, the expense of which will have to be met from within the authority's revised budget. Such expense is a result of the authority's decision to breach the provisional cap, and all authorities are aware of those implications.

Mr. Norman Baker (Lewes): Does the Minister realise that many Members will find his answer slightly depressing? He and the Labour party were elected to government, by a quite substantial margin, with a mandate for a fresh start. Furthermore, a part of the Labour manifesto dealt with a brand new start with local government, which, for the past 18 years, has been held in a stranglehold. Controls over most of UK local government—unlike controls over most local governments in Europe—have been excessive.

Does the Minister also realise that the local government elections, which were held on 1 May, also comprehensively rejected the Conservatives? The mandate at both national and local level, therefore, is to pursue a policy opposite to that pursued by the previous Government. I therefore do not understand why the Minister is pursuing a Conservative party policy. How can he be so attracted to capping when capping is anathema to equality between local and central Government, and by what right does he feel that he and other Ministers can override the wishes of the electorate and of individual county and district councils? The electorate voted for one policy, but a different policy is being imposed by the Government.

Mr. Raynsford: The hon. Gentleman cannot have been listening to my speech. I made it absolutely clear that the Government are committed to a new relationship with local authorities and to dealing with many of the problems that he and other Opposition Members have highlighted. I have also made it clear that we inherited a financial settlement that came into operation a month before we were elected. We have made it quite clear that, this year, we shall be working within that financial framework. It would not be possible to make such a commitment to the electorate and then to renege on it without being subjected to criticism of being a party that does not honour its pledges to the electorate.

The Government clearly stated what we would do—that we would work within the financial framework that we inherited—and we are doing it. We are, however, simultaneously examining ways in which we can improve relationships between local and central Government and improve local government's future financial framework. We shall improve those relationships and that framework.

Should Somerset wish to challenge its cap, it will have 28 days from the date of designation—until 18 June—to propose an alternative amount and to provide its reasons for doing so. The authority will not only be able to submit its written case, but will have an opportunity to meet me or one of my colleagues to make its case directly. A meeting has provisionally been arranged—for 26 June 1997—with my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, who has responsibility for housing and local government. We shall consider all the relevant points, including those made in this debate, before reaching our final decision.

Final caps will be stated in an order, which is, of course, subject to approval by the House. Once that process is complete, we shall notify the authority of its maximum permitted budget. If a budget reduction is confirmed, the authority would have 21 days in which to calculate a substitute budget requirement. It would then, of course, have to set a reduced council tax.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at twenty-seven minutes past Seven o'clock.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Mr. Singh, Leicester

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date he assessed the representations made by the hon. Member for Leicester, East concerning the case of Mr. Singh of Leicester; and what was the cost to public funds of the case. [1481]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I reviewed the representations made by the hon. Member for Leicester, East in this case on 15 May and wrote to him that day, conveying my decision. Mr. Singh was removed to India on 20 May.

It is not the practice to calculate the costs to public funds of individual cases of illegal entry and such estimates could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Naturalisation Applications

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the language test for naturalisation applications. [1480]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have no plans to review the statutory requirement that applicants for naturalisation under section 6(1) of the British Nationality Act 1981 should have sufficient knowledge of the English, Welsh or Scottish Gaelic language. There is no language requirement for those applying as the spouse of a British citizen.

In 1996, only 27 applicants out of the 17,670 applications determined were refused citizenship because of their failure to meet this requirement.

There remains a residual discretion for the Secretary of State to waive the need to fulfil the requirement if he considers that because of the applicant's age or physical or mental condition, it would be unreasonable to expect it to be fulfilled.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time taken to process naturalisation applications. [1479]

Mr. O'Brien: Sixteen months, as at 30 April 1997.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications by persons of independent means have been dealt with by the Immigration and Nationality Department so far in 1997. [1816]

Mr. O'Brien: The information requested is given in the table:

Persons of independent means[1] January to April 1997

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current waiting time for consideration of applications for each of the divisions of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. [796]

Mr. O'Brien: The available information on waiting times is given in the table.

Electoral Practices

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he will take to improve publicity on the (a) availability and procedure for postal and proxy votes and (b) the procedure for voter registration. [1495]

Mr. George Howarth: Absent voting facilities were publicised at the general election through a television campaign and advertisements, including an application form, in national daily, national Sunday and ethnic minority newspapers. We are reviewing the effectiveness of this publicity and are considering how best to publicise this autumn's canvass for electoral registration.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish a standing electoral commission to monitor and keep under review electoral law, procedure and practice. [1496]

Mr. Howarth: We have no present plans to do so.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State of the Home Department what steps he will take to reform the procedure of electoral registration; and what steps he will take to reduce the amount of time which elapses between the last day for registration for a given election, and the election. [1494]

Mr. Howarth: We have no plans at present to make changes to the system of electoral registration, or to extend the time before an election during which additions can be made to the register beyond the current deadline of the closing date for candidates' nominations for the election concerned. But we will keep these matters under review.

Detainees

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which categories of detainees may be kept for unspecified periods of time in HM Prison Service establishments or detention centres without being charged with a crime. [783]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Prison Service keeps in custody those subject to a warrant of commitment or other lawful detention order. Those held for unspecified periods of time will be remanded by a court awaiting trial, sentence or extradition proceedings or be detained under Immigration Act powers.

Departmental Computer Systems

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure that his Department's computer systems are millennium compliant; and if he will make a statement. [1249]

Mr. Straw: My Department is aware of the problem. Year 2000 managers have been appointed in each business area to deal with it and a steering committee, chaired at director level, has been established to monitor and co-ordinate action taken across the Department. The Department's information technology (IT) supplier (Sema Group) has completed an audit of IT systems and is about to commence more detailed analysis. The aim is to produce a prioritised, costed programme of action by October 1997 and to have implemented and tested modified systems by the end of 1998. This is in line with the recommendations of the Central IT Unit (CITU) and the National Audit Office.

We are participating in the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency's programme of consultation and education and are members of the Year 2000 Public Sector Group.

Firearms Act 1997

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place a copy in the Library of the guidance issued by his Department to police forces concerning the Firearms Act 1997. [1309]

Mr. Michael: A copy of the police guidance will be placed in the Library when it is issued. This will be immediately after the draft compensation scheme has been debated and approved by Parliament. The debates are expected to take place very shortly.

Asylum Seekers

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many of the asylum seekers on hunger strike at HMP Birmingham/Winson Green, since 5 May have been detained longer than two months; and if he will list them and the periods for which they have been detained; [782]

(2) how many of the cases of asylum seekers on hunger strike at HMP Birmingham/Winson Green have been brought for independent review before a judicial authority; [784]

(3) how many of the hunger strikers at HMP Birmingham/Winson Green have alleged torture in their applications for asylum; and, of those, how many have had access to independent medical assessment of their allegations. [785]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There is currently only one asylum seeker refusing regular prison meals at Her Majesty's prison Birmingham. It would not be proper to disclose details of an individual case.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the detained asylum seekers at HMP Birmingham/Winson Green were detained prior to an initial determination of their application. [786]

Mr. O'Brien: As at 30 May 1997, the most recent date for which information is available, a total of 11 persons who had sought asylum at some stage were recorded as being solely detained under Immigration Act powers in Her Majesty's Prison, Winson Green, Birmingham. Of those, nine persons were detained prior to an initial determination on their asylum application. Three of these nine detainees had previously been detained as part of a criminal sentence. They have all subsequently had an initial determination and four have also been through the appeals process and are now awaiting removal.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to undertake a review of the policy of detention of asylum seekers. [787]

Mr. O'Brien: A general review of immigration detention policy is currently being undertaken.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are held in detention under immigration and asylum legislation in (a) prison and (b) detention centres; and of those how many have been held for (i) 0 to three months, (ii) three to six months, (iii) six months to one year and (iv) over one year. [1748]

Mr. O'Brien: The number of persons held in detention under immigration and asylum legislation on 31 March 1997, the most recent date that statistics are available, is given in table 1. An analysis of this data by length of detention is shown in table 2.

Table 1: Persons detained under immigration and asylum legislation on 31 March 1997

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps the Prison Service is taking to investigate and resolve the unrest among asylum seekers held in Rochester Prison. [1328]

Ms Joyce Quin: Current unrest amongst the general population of immigration detainees held in Rochester prison is believed to centre on complaints about prison food, being locked in their cells for longer than normal and their access to education facilities being cut. However, no formal complaint has been received.

The meals and menus are checked regularly by the governor, the area manager, catering adviser and members of the Board of Visitors and have been adjudged wholesome and varied. The regime of the whole prison has been temporarily reduced because of the need to provide staff for a bedwatch on a prisoner in the Medway hospital, aggravated by a high level of sick leave. This has resulted in a reduction in the time out of cell of all prisoners and the closure of education facilities for the detainees. To compensate for this, wing-based education is being introduced for the detainees from Monday 2 June 1997 until a normal regime can be restored.

Drug Misuse

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research his Department has evaluated on the impact of drug misuse on crime; what representations his Department has received on funding for services relating to drug misuse; what impact the new methodology for allocating resources for drug misuse services will have on the level of funding allocated for East Lancashire; and if he will make a statement. [1440]

Mr. George Howarth: The Home Office has a research programme designed to shed further light on the links between drugs and crime.

Recently evaluated projects include drug prevalence findings from the 1994 British Crime Survey, lifestyles of crack and heroin addicts in Manchester and public attitudes to drug-related crime.

The funding of services for the treatment of drug misuse is a matter for the Department of Health. No representations have been received by the Home Office on the new methodology for allocating resources for such services.

Primary Purpose Rule

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce the outcome of his review of the primary purpose rule. [1125]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 22 May, Official Report, column 109.

Asylum Applications

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for asylum were determined in each month during 1997 to date; and in each month how many were rejected. [1124]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The requested information is given in the table.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) EC and (b) Irish nationals have been deported in the last five years. [1751]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information on European Community and Irish nationals is given in the table. Reliable statistics are not available for 1992. The number deported does not include those who are removed as illegal entrants or under port refusal procedures.

Persons removed[1] from the United Kingdom under the deportation process[2] 1993–96

Irish Prisoners (Repatriation)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in how many cases, to date, the papers of Irish prisoners who have applied for repatriation have been passed to the Irish Government; in how many cases prisoners have awaited a response for (a) more than three months, (b) more than four months, (c) more than five months and (d) a longer period; what consultation has taken place between both Governments to expedite the processing of such applications; and if he will make a statement; [1767]

(2) how many Irish prisoners have been repatriated to the Irish Republic since the Irish Government ratified the relevant convention; how many prisoners are currently awaiting repatriation; what proposals Her Majesty's Government have to accelerate such repatriation; and if he will make a statement. [1768]

Ms Joyce Quin: Seventy-five requests for repatriation to the Irish Republic have been referred to the Irish Government. Of these, from the date of first application for repatriation to the date of notification of the final outcome of the request, one prisoner was notified of the decision in his case in less than three months; the remaining 74 prisoners have awaited notification of a final decision for six months or more. Of these, 19 prisoners have been notified of the outcome of their applications and 55 applications remain to be determined.

To date, 10 prisoners have been repatriated to the Republic. Six prisoners whose applications for repatriation to the Republic have been agreed by all parties concerned are currently awaiting repatriation.

Officials in the two jurisdictions are in regular contact regarding the processing of repatriation applications and ways of ensuring that such requests are dealt with as quickly as possible.

Immigration Cases

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to take a decision on immigration case refs. IMP M672147/2(s), TH/41841/93, IMM 136180, about which the Adjudicator made recommendations on 22 November 1996. [1803]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The adjudicator's determination was not issued to the Home Office until 21 February 1997. Although this made a recommendation that entry clearance be granted, it did not state whether the appeal had been allowed or dismissed. On 27 March, the Immigration Appeals Authority informed the Home Office that the appeal had in fact been allowed.

The entry clearance officer in Islamabad was subsequently instructed to issue entry clearance and this instruction was reiterated on 23 May 1997. The appellant's representatives in the United Kingdom have been informed of this.

Political and Special Advisers

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the names of the political and special advisers who have been appointed to his Department since the General Election. [1744]

Mr. Straw: Mr. Norman Warner and Mr. Ed Owen have been appointed as special advisers in this Department.

Volunteers Week

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what support his Department will be giving to Volunteers Week. [1908]

Mr. Michael: Volunteers Week, which I was pleased to help launch this morning and which will run until 7 June, is a great opportunity to celebrate the enormous commitment made by volunteers to the life of our communities, and to encourage the involvement of others. The National Centre for Volunteering co-ordinates this annual event and receives financial support from the Home Office to do so.

I am delighted to be able to participate in the week by taking up the challenge issued by the Women's Royal Voluntary Service (WRVS) to hon. Members to give up an hour of their time to volunteer on a WRVS project. I hope that all hon. Members will join me in participating in Volunteers Week to acknowledge the achievements of volunteers, who give freely of their time and talents throughout the year and whose involvement makes such a difference to so many people.

Humberside Police

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce his policy on the change of name of the Humberside police to the Humber police. [1030]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 22 May 1997]: I am issuing a consultation paper today to seek the views of the local police, police authority and local authorities on the Government's preferred option of not proceeding with the name change unless there is clear evidence of local support for the change. I am also writing today to all hon. Members for constituencies in the Humberside police area to seek their views in response to the consultation paper.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Holocaust (Documents)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make available for public inspection all documents held in the Public Record Office regarding the Nazi Holocaust. [1451]

Mr. Hoon: Questions of release of closed records in the Public Record Office are in the first instance the responsibility of individual Departments. Departments keep closed records regularly under review for release, if the sensitivity has lapsed. However no closed war time records relating to the Nazi holocaust have currently been identified in the Public Record Office.

Radioactive Waste Disposal (Documents)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will arrange for copies to be placed in the Library of all documents deposited in the Public Record Office by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority concerning the disposal of plutonium contaminated radioactive waste of United Kingdom origin at the Hurd Deep. [1437]

Mr. Hoon: Forty two files have been identified among records transferred by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority to the Public Record Office which relate to the disposal of radioactive waste at the Hurd Deep. All are open to public inspection, except one which is not yet thirty years old. Arrangements are in hand to make this one item available. The making of copies of this quantity of material for the Library could only be done at disproportionate cost.

DEFENCE

RAF Chilmark

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 20 May, Official Report, column 25, when he will discuss the future of the Chilmark Section of RAF Chilmark with the local planning authority, Salisbury district council. [1286]

Mr. Spellar: My officials are due to discuss the potential uses of the Chilmark site with Salisbury District Council shortly. My reply on the 20 May, Official Report, column 258, should have included both Salisbury district council and Fovant parish council which were omitted in error.

Chartered Vessels

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to ensure that vessels chartered by the MOD are British-flagged and crewed; and if he will make a statement. [1071]

Dr. John Reid: The Ministry of Defence is always eager to charter British flagged and crewed ships where they offer best value for money in meeting our requirements. Experience has shown however, that, in general, British ships, particularly for certain categories such as dry cargo vessels, are fully committed to regular trading activities and are seldom offered for charter.

In today's security environment, a substantial part of any logistic shipping requirement can be met on the worldwide market where vessels need not necessarily be British flagged or crewed as demonstrated during the Gulf war, in subsequent operations and in day to day activities. The hon. Member will, of course, be aware of the important contribution made by the specialist ships and civilian crews of the Royal Fleet Auxiliary Service who provide such sterling assistance to our armed forces around the globe.

Departmental Property

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what plans he has to commission research into current planning guidance and practice on the disposal of his Department's sites and to investigate the wider social consequences of disposal; [1212]

(2) what plans he has to review the current policy for the disposal of surplus departmental land and sites; and if he will make a statement; [1218]

(3) if he will commission a research project to establish the total public costs and benefits of major disposals of his Department's property as an alternative to the present policy; and if he will make a statement. [1217]

Mr. Spellar: Our policy is to dispose of surplus property in a timely manner which takes into account the Government's wider employment and environmental objectives, local planning and social considerations, and the need to protect the taxpayers interest. We are currently in discussions with the DoE on the broader planning and development policy context within which such disposal take place.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his Department's houses are empty in each district council area in Hampshire. [1214]

Mr. Spellar: My Department has 1,225 empty houses in Hampshire. Of these, 133 are surplus agreed for disposal; 257 are allocated for deployments or individual moves; 340 are awaiting works/modernisation and 14 await furnishings.

A breakdown by district council area is as follows:

	Number

Mr. Spellar: My Department is not responsible for monitoring marine radioactive waste disposal sites.

Red Deer Hunting

Mr. Cawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations of the Ministry of Defence land on which hunting of red deer currently takes place; and what plans he has to review the authorisation of that activity. [1267]

Mr. Spellar: No licences have been issued for the hunting of Red deer on land owned by the Ministry of Defence. There are no plans to review the authorisation of that activity. Some limited culling of red deer takes place, as a part of routine management.

C130J

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of acquiring C130J transport aircraft; and if the acquisition programme has met its implementation milestones. [1335]

Mr. Spellar: The total estimated cost of the C130J programme to the defence equipment budget is around £1.8 billion. The programme has not yet met its implementation milestones as a result of development problems and difficulties in meeting the flight test and certification objectives. These have caused a delay of about one year to initial aircraft deliveries.

Pensions (Gurkha Regiment)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he plans to hold with his Nepalese counterpart regarding pension payments to former members of the Gurkha Regiment who served in Hong Kong. [1491]

Dr. John Reid: I currently have no plans to discuss pension payments to former members of the Gurkha Regiment who served in Hong Kong with the Government of Nepal.

Future Large Aircraft

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution his Department has made to the Future Large Aircraft programme; and if he will make a statement on its commitment to purchase the FLA. [1332]

Mr. Spellar: My Department has been closely involved in discussions with European partners on the Future Large Aircraft programme, which is a potential solution to our future air transport requirements. We are currently considering the way forward and will take a decision as soon as possible.

Eurofighter (Employment)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United Kingdom jobs are currently dependent on Eurofighter; and how many he estimates there will be at the peak of production. [1020]

Mr. Spellar: The Eurofighter development programme currently sustains about 6,000 jobs in the United Kingdom. This figure is expected to rise to about 14,000 at the peak of production.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total public expenditure cost to date of the United Kingdom's contribution to the European fighter aircraft project; and what is his estimate of the future cost. [1629]

Mr. Spellar: Up to 31 March 1997 the UK's expenditure on the Eurofighter programme totalled £2.7 billion. Future UK procurement expenditure is currently estimated at £12,744 million. Figures are at average 1996–97 prices.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by what means his Department makes available its publications in (a) Braille, (b) audio tape and (c) large print; and how this is publicised. [1673]

Mr. Spellar: My Department's publications are not routinely available in alternative formats for public use, although this may be arranged on individual request. No special measures have been taken to publicise this service. Internally, we provide a range of Departmental publications in alternative formats to staff who request them. This is widely publicised in the Department's house journals etc. as part of the MOD's commitment to providing equal opportunities for blind staff or those with visual impairment.

Departmental Advisers

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the names of the political and special advisers appointed to his Department since the general election. [1628]

Mr. George Robertson: I have appointed Mr. Alasdair McGowan as a Special Adviser.

Disability

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to adopt a social model of disability in framing all future and amending previous relevant legislation and guidance; and if he will make a statement. [1674]

Mr. Spellar: Given the nature of my Department's responsibilities I am unable to foresee a situation in which Defence Ministers would be required to frame legislative proposals which would impact significantly on disabled people. In its role as an employer of civilian staff, however, my Department aims, among other things, to tackle any environmental and attitudinal barriers which may exist in the workplace which prevent disabled staff from achieving their full potential. The Programme of Action on Disability is planned to be launched later this year.

Military Exports (Saudi Arabia)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the National Audit Office's report on the Al Yamamah military export deal with Saudi Arabia to be published. [1694]

Mr. Spellar: I understand that the then Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee decided that the 1992 National Audit Office Report into the Ministry of Defence's involvement in the Al-Yamamah programme should not be published as it refers to arrangements which are confidential between the Governments of the United Kingdom and Saudi Arabia.

Test and Firing Ranges

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to receive recommendations from the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency about the future of the test and firing ranges; and if he will make a statement. [973]

Mr. Spellar: My noble colleague the Minister for Defence Procurement expects shortly to receive advice on the options for reducing the capacity of the test and evaluation land ranges managed by DERA. He will announce the decisions arising from the study as soon as possible thereafter.

Equipment Exhibition

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who will be opening the Royal Navy and British Army Equipment Exhibition. [1742]

Mr. Spellar: The Royal Navy and British Army Equipment Exhibition is normally opened by one of the Defence ministers. A decision about who will open this year's exhibition will be made nearer the time.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Departmental Computer Systems

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to ensure that his Department's computer systems are millennium compliant; and if he will make a statement. [1239]

The Attorney-General: The Departments for which I am responsible have conducted surveys of their computer systems for the purpose of addressing millennium compliance. Modification and testing is proceeding according to plan, with a view to ensuring compliance by the end of next year.

All new systems include millennium compliance as a standard specification in the operational requirement.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Intestacy

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many people have died intestate and had their estates transferred to the Duchy of Lancaster in each year since 1992. [1204]

Dr. David Clark: Figures for the years 1992 to 1994 were given to my hon. Friend in a written answer on 7 June 1995, Official Report columns 258–259. Figures for the six month period 1 October 1994 to 31 March 1995 and for the year 1995—96 are as follows.

The number of intestate estates, the value of which, after disposal of assets, was transferred to the Duchy of Lancaster and which are referred to as 'closed cases' was as follows:

1 October 1994 to 31 March 1995: 75.

1995–1996: 305.

The number of cases reported to the Solicitor for the affairs of the Duchy of Lancaster for the same period was:

1 October 1994 to 31 March 1995: 148.

1995–1996: 405.

The number of estates which devolved to surviving blood relatives—kin—for the same period was:

1 October 1994 to 31 March 1995: 22.

The six month period 1 October 1994 to 31 March 1995 was due to a change in the Duchy accounting year.

Records are maintained by reference to the date of reporting and of closing cases, not necessarily to the date of death.

Disability

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make it his policy to adopt a social model of disability in framing all future and amending previous relevant legislation and guidance; and if he will make a statement. [1658]

Dr. David Clark: Our manifesto commits us to establishing

"comprehensive, enforceable civil rights for disabled people against discrimination in society or at work, developed in partnership with all interested parties".

We shall be consulting widely with other Government Departments and developing proposals in partnership with disability organisations, employers, employer organisations, trade unions and others. An essential issue will be the definition of disability. It is not appropriate for me to pre-empt the outcome of that consultation.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster by what means his Department makes available its publications in (a) Braille, (d) audio tape and (c) large print; and how this is publicised. [1657]

Dr. David Clark: The Cabinet Office (OPS) and its agencies has five publications available in either braille, audio tape or large print.

Name of publication	Availability	Publicity

Benevolent Fund

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the donations given by the Duchy of Lancaster Benevolent Fund to persons and organisations in Pendle for each year since 1992. [1200]

Mr. David Clark: I would point out to my hon. Friend that I am not a trustee of the Duchy Benevolent Fund. Audited accounts of the fund are forwarded to the Charity Commissioners each year. I understand that it is the policy of the trustees not to give details of individual recipients who receive grants from the Duchy Benevolent Fund although the trustees have no objection to recipients giving this information. In order to help my hon. Friend, the secretary of the fund has provided details of total amounts paid to organisations and individuals in the Pendle area from the Benevolent Fund for the past four years:

1994: £1,400

1996: £5,170.

Departmental Computer Systems

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has for the reprogramming of computers and technical equipment in Government departments to address the year 2000 problem. [1449]

Mr. Kilfoyle: This is essentially the responsibility of individual departments. However my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has recently written to all ministerial heads of Department to ensure that they are aware of the arrangements which exist for dealing with the year 2000 date change problem.

From within the Cabinet Office (OPS) departments are supported by the Central Information Technology Unit (CITU) and the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency (CCTA). As part of that support CITU and CCTA have identified a programme of action to ensure that the Government's response to the year 2000 problem is co-ordinated and coherent. This involves each department in producing a detailed and costed action plan by October to ensure that all their systems are modified and tested by January 1999.

The recent National Audit Office report, "Managing the Millennium Threat", demonstrated that the public sector was doing as well as the private sector in tackling the problem, however, there is no room for complacency.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to ensure that civil servants take all steps necessary to ensure that Government computer systems are millennium compliant; and if he will make a statement. [1232]

Mr. Kilfoyle: It is the responsibility of individual departments to ensure that their computer systems are millennium compliant. Departments are satisfied that they have sufficiently skilled staff to tackle the problem.

Departments are supported from the Cabinet Office (OPS) by the Central Information Technology Unit (CITU) and the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency (CCTA). As part of that support CITU and CCTA have identified a programme of action to ensure that Government's response to the year 2000 problem is co-ordinated and coherent and that all systems are modified and tested by January 1999.

The CCTA has also produced a six volume set of guides covering every aspect of starting, managing and successfully implementing a full year 2000 compliance programme. The set, called "Tackling the Year 2000", forms the most detailed impartial guidance available to date.

The recent report by the National Audit Office, "Managing the Millennium Threat", shows that the public sector had work well underway to deal with the millennium date change.

Charters

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those charters where non-compliance with charter standards trigger financial compensation, indicating the specific relevant targets. [1107]

Dr. David Clark: The information is as follows.

Charter	Details
London Underground's Customer Charter	If a customer is delayed for more than 15 minutes because of London Underground's failure, they will give the customer a refund voucher to the value of the delayed journey;
Northern Ireland Railways Passenger's Charter	Allows compensation in the form of discounts on season tickets if Northern Ireland Railways fail by more than a small margin to meet their punctuality and reliability standards. For people not eligible for season ticket discounts, it allows compensation if a train is seriously delayed or cancelled, or if a seat reservation is not honoured. For all qualifying claims, a minimum discount of £1 is offered;
25 franchise-specific charters for the rail industry in Great Britain	Each must have terms as least as favourable to passengers as those under British Rail's old Passenger's Charter, which ceased to exist on 1 April 1997, when franchise arrangements for the rail industry came into full effect. It allowed compensation in the form of discounts on season tickets if British Rail failed by more than a small margin to meet their punctuality and reliability standards. For people not eligible for season ticket discounts, it allowed compensation if a train was seriously delayed or cancelled, or if a seat or sleeper reservation was not honoured.

There are also departmental payments made under special circumstances which are not directly linked to charters, for example, the Inland Revenue's compensation for "serious error" as defined in the "Code of Practice Mistakes by the Inland Revenue". Other departments with special payment schemes are HM Customs & Excise, the Benefits Agency, the Contributions Agency, and the Northern Ireland Social Security Agency.

Liz Blackman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what proposals she has to reform the Business Links network to make it more responsive to the needs of small and medium size businesses; [1533]

(2) what assessment she has made of the current effectiveness of the Business Links network in supporting small and medium size businesses. [1532]

Mrs. Roche: Improving the Business Link service to small and medium sized businesses is one of my key priorities. I am committed to ensuring that all Business Links deliver a service which is of the highest quality. Many are already doing so, and I am discussing with officials and with the national Business Link partners how we can ensure that all Business Links are brought up to the standard of the best.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Liz Blackman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals she has to reform the loan guarantee scheme to encourage the development of the small and medium-sized business sector. [1562]

Mrs. Roche: As a priority I will be examining ways in which the Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme can do more to help small and medium sized high technology businesses.

Disability

Mr. Burstow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make it her policy to adopt a social model of disability in framing all future and amending previous relevant legislation and guidance; and if she will make a statement. [1680]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Department of Trade and Industry is committed to participating fully in development of policy of comprehensive, enforceable civil rights for disabled people. Overall responsibility for disability is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment.

Water Cannon

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which strategic export control category is used to identify marker dye used in the Tactica water cannon; and if she will list the countries in respect of which such licences have been granted in each year since 1992. [1833]

Mrs. Roche: Marker dye is not subject to export control.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the export control categories under which water cannon have been categorised. [1848]

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many water cannon exported to Indonesia have received Export Credits Guarantee Department cover. [1849]

Mrs. Roche: Sixteen.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the proposed statutory national minimum wage, once implemented, will be index-linked to (a) the retail prices index or (b) average earnings. [847]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The independent Low Pay Commission will recommend to Government the initial level of the National Minimum Wage, according to the economic circumstance of the time, and will have responsibility for reviewing the level of the Minimum Wage.

Bananas

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her policy in respect of the measures proposed by the European Parliament to preserve the market position of Eastern Caribbean bananas against competition from bananas produced in central and South America. [1050]

Mrs. Roche: The position of Eastern Caribbean banana imports into the EU market is closely related to the special provisions of the EU banana regime. This regime is currently the subject of dispute settlement proceedings in the World Trade Organisation (WTO) which are not yet completed. The Parliament's views on Commission proposals for changes to the regime will be taken into account when the Council of Ministers comes to decide on the future of the regime in the light of the final outcome of the current WTO dispute.

The Government are conscious of our historic commitments to African, Caribbean and Pacific (ACP) banana producers, including those in the Eastern Caribbean, and of our obligations as members of the WTO.

Piece Workers

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she plans that the statutory national minimum wage will include provisions for piece workers; and if she will make a statement. [1774]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Gracious Speech made clear our commitment to the introduction of legislation to set in place a National Minimum Wage which will provide a wage floor for employees, including those employed as pieceworkers. It will be set sensibly with the advice of the independent Low Pay Commission.

Working Time Directive

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to implement the working time directive; and if she will make a statement on its extension to transport workers. [1128]

Mr. Ian McCartney: We shall implement the Working Time Directive without any further avoidable delay. The European Commission are expected to publish a White Paper on options for dealing with the sectors of activity excluded from the Directive shortly.

Genetically Engineered Animals

Mr. Etherington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list all United Kingdom patents that have been (a) applied for and (b) granted since 1 July 1995 in respect of genetically engineered animals and processes for creating such animals. [1119]

Mr. Battle: I can only give information about patent applications which have been published. Prior to publication such information is confidential. There have been a total of three patent applications filed under the 1977 Patents Act and published since 1 July 1995 relating to genetically engineered animals and processes for preparing them. Patent application No. GB 2295395 relates to an animal model for Alzheimer's disease, application No. GB 2291646 relates to transgenic fish and application No. GB 2288807 relates to transgenic animals expressing an insecticidal protein. None of these applications have yet been granted. One application, namely GB 2265909, which was made before 1 July 1995 and which relates to a process for producing transgenic animals, has since been granted. This information covers only applications filed at the UK Patent Office and does not include applications filed at the European Patent Office and which may have the legal effect of UK patents when granted by that Office.

Post Offices

Mr. David Heath: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what plans she has to intervene to prevent the closure of Crown post offices and their replacement by franchised facilities when such closures are not supported by the local community. [1560]

(2) if she will intervene to stop the proposed closure by Post Office Counters Ltd. of Frome Post Office and its replacement by franchised facilities. [1559]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I announced on 16 May a comprehensive review of options for implementing the Government's election manifesto pledge to grant the Post Office greater commercial freedom. In the context of this review, I also announced that the Post Office had, at my request, agreed to suspend its programme of converting Crown post office to agency status—except where irreversible contractual commitments already existed—until we are in a position to make informed decisions. The proposal to convert the Crown post office in Frome has therefore been suspended.

Low Pay Commission

Mr. Healey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if a decision has been made on the chairmanship of the Low Pay Commission. [1907]

Mrs. Beckett: I am pleased to announce that Professor George Bain, currently Principal of the London Business School, has accepted the Government's invitation to chair the Low Pay Commission.

Konver

Mr. Key: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for what reasons European Commission non-objective area Konver expenditure on the Navy, Army and Air Force Institution re-employment programme at Amesbury has been stopped; and if he will make a statement. [1093]

Mrs. Roche: It is a requirement of the Konver II Programme that expenditure in non Objective 1, 2 and 5(b) areas, for the UK as a whole, cannot exceed 50 per cent. of the total Konver II programme allocation. To ensure that this limit would not be breached, the Konver II Programme Monitoring Committee agreed at their last meeting, that commitments to projects in these areas needed to be put on hold whilst ceilings on expenditure were being considered. Following discussions with the Government Offices and relevant Government Departments, the applicants in the South West have been advised that commitments in these areas can now be resumed. Subject to final approvals, a commitment of funds to this project is expected shortly.

Bosnia

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what support her Department offers to British companies wishing to bid for reconstruction projects in the Republic of Bosnia Herzegovina; and if she will make a statement. [1452]

Mrs. Roche: Reconstruction projects in Bosnia and Herzegovina are funded principally by the World Bank, European bank for Reconstruction and Development and the European Commission. Information on these, and other multilateral aid funded projects, is held by the World Aid Section of my Department and is available to all British companies.

More generally, my Department has also promoted awareness among British companies of the opportunities—both general and specific—arising out of the international reconstruction effort in Bosnia through, among other initiatives, the mounting of conferences and seminars. My Department also provides regular updates on the latest commercial and political developments to companies which have expressed an interest in reconstruction opportunities in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Alcohol Tax (Japan)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current level of taxation being levied by Japan on (a) Scotch whisky and (b) scochi; and if he will make a statement on convergence of taxation. [1365]

Mrs. Roche: As the question asks about convergence of liquor tax rates in Japan, a clear reference to the recent dispute over Japan's discriminatory taxation of foreign spirits compared with Japanese shochu, this answer assumes that the reference to "scochi" is a mistranscription of "shochu".

The current level of taxation levied by Japan on Scotch whisky of 40° of alcohol is 982,300 Yen per kilolitre (¥/KL) and on shochu of 25° of alcohol is 155,700 ¥/KL. However, as a result of negotiations between the EU and Japan to end discriminatory taxation of foreign spirits, the taxation on Scotch whisky will fall by 44 per cent. on 1 October 1997 to 551,000 ¥/KL and fall again on 1 October 1998 to 409,000 ¥/KL. Taxation on shochu will rise on 1 October 1997 to 201,900 ¥/KL and rise again on 1 October 1998 to 248,100 ¥/KL. A further transition period is granted for one type of shochu (shochu B). This will mean that once these changes are fully implemented the tax differential on a tax rate per kilolitre per degree of alcohol basis will be reduced from around 600 per cent. to just 3 per cent. for Scotch whisky, whilst taxation rates for shochu and white spirits will be equalised. The Scotch Whisky Association estimate that this will be worth some £75 million every year.

Furthermore, the WTO ruling obtained in reaching this settlement provides a useful precedent for tackling discriminatory taxation in other countries. As a result, the EU is already undertaking WTO consultations with the South Korean Government and have proposed initiating WTO consultations with Chile.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Education Qualifications

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if RSA Stage II is equivalent to at least GCSE grade C for purposes of employment or entry into further education. [50]

Mr. Worthington: There are no general equivalents between RSA Stage II and GCSE at grade C and above as the course content, assessment methods and standards required may differ. Work is currently under way between the various examining bodies, the National Council for Vocational Qualifications and the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority in relation to the placing and equivalence of all qualifications within the National Framework recommended by Sir Ron Dearing.

Civil Service (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many civil servants, of each grade, in her Department, were of Asian origin, on 5 May. [734]

Mr. Murphy: The Northern Ireland Office is based in both London and Northern Ireland, and employs staff from the Home Civil Service and the Northern Ireland Civil Service groups. Monitoring of ethnic origin is currently limited to Home Civil Service employees in Great Britain. As at 5 May 1997, there were eight employees, up to Grade 7, out of an eligible monitoring group of 108, who had identified themselves as being of Asian origin.

It is not possible to provide the information requested in respect of the Northern Ireland Civil Service. The Northern Ireland Civil Service monitors its workforce in terms of religion, sex and disability. It does not undertake any ethnic monitoring of its workforce. The Service will be reviewing its monitoring policies to take account of the Race Relations (Northern Ireland) Order 1997 and the guidance on best practice which will be produced following its implementation.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals she has to increase the number of ethnic minority employees in her Department. [735]

Mr. Murphy: The Northern Ireland Office staff group includes 108 Home Civil Service employees based in London who are eligible for ethnic monitoring. Over the last three years there has been a 6 per cent. increase, to 19.5 per cent., in the number of employees who have identified themselves as being of Black or Asian origin. Recruitment sources have included inter-departmental trawis, absorption of surplus staff from other departments and the use of the Recruitment and Assessment Service instant recruitment scheme. The Northern Ireland Office will continue to use all of these methods to meet its obligations to recruit on the basis of fair and open competition.

The Northern Ireland Civil Service is committed to ensuring equality opportunity in employment irrespective of any extraneous factors not pertinent to job requirements. The NICS equal opportunities policy embraces all staff and applicants for employment, including those who are members of ethnic minority groups.

Mosque, Craigavon

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations she has received from (a) the Royal Ulster Constabulary and (b) other regarding the incidents of fire and theft at the Mosque in Craigavon, County Armagh. [745]

Mr. Ingram: No representations have been received regarding this matter.

Arable Area Payments

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the (a) maximum, (b) minimum and (c) average payment made under the arable area payments scheme in 1996–97. [1721]

Mr. Murphy: Maximum, minimum and average payments made under the Arable Area Payments Scheme in Northern Ireland in 1996–97 were (a) maximum—£61,772.70, (b) minimum—£73.32 and (c) average—£2,6111.87.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Uganda

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to visit Uganda. [1458]

Clare Short: While I have no firms plans for a visit to Uganda at this stage, I hope to visit in the coming months.

Tanzania

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to review British aid to Tanzania. [1490]

Clare Short: As part of the Department's comprehensive spending review, we are reviewing all our expenditure programmes, including that in Tanzania.

Aid Recipients

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the countries in receipt of aid from the United Kingdom, indicating the level of grant aid given to each. [1463]

Clare Short: Britain gives bilateral aid to over 160 countries. All new bilateral aid is provided on grant terms. Details are set out in Table 7 of the 1996 edition of British Aid Statistics (deposited in the Library of the House in January 1997). These and other countries also benefit from UK contributions to the multilateral development institutions of which we are a member.

Afghanistan

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has received from non-Governmental organisations working in Afghanistan regarding freedom of access for women in Taliban-held areas. [1450]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development supports the work of many non-governmental agencies in Afghanistan and has consulted closely with them on the question of human rights.

We subscribe to the common donor position that all parties in Afghanistan should recognise, protect and promote the equal rights and dignity of men and women, including access to education, employment outside the home, personal security and freedom from intimidation and harassment.

Bangladesh

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what emergency aid she intends to make available to the Government of Bangladesh following the recent cyclone. [1476]

Clare Short: Following consultations with the Government of Bangladesh we have approved grants totalling £212,000 to NGOs to provide assistance for shelter for families in the worst-affected areas. We will consider further grants to Government or NGOs as needs become clearer.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development by what means her Department makes available its publications in (a) Braille, (b) audio tape, and (c) large print; and how this is publicised. [1659]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development produces only a small number of publications most of which are for educational purposes only. Consideration has been given in the past to producing publications for the visually handicapped but insufficient demand has so far been identified. We will keep the question under review.

UNESCO

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the allocation of funding for the UK membership of UNESCO. [1094]

Clare Short: Our first contribution to UNESCO about £5 million covering the period 1 July—31 December 1997, will be met from the contingency reserve in the development budget. Future contributions will be considered in the next resources round. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the right hon. and learned Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham, (Mr. Hogg) Hansard 20 May 1997, column 37.

Iran

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what estimate she has made of (a) the number of refugees in Iran and (b) the countries from which these refugees have come; and what assistance she is providing to those refugees. [1339]

Clare Short: Current estimates are that there are 1.4 million Afghan refugees and 580,000 Iraqi refugees in Iran.

In the last three financial years, the UK Government has spent in Iran, £10,065 million on Afghan refugees, £422,000 on Kurdish refugees and £685,000 on other Iraqi refugees.

Departmental Computer Systems

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to ensure that her Department's computer systems will be millennium compliant; and if she will make a statement. [1251]

Clare Short: The core computer systems of the Department will be millennium compliant by October 1998. We are currently investigating the smaller systems. A costed action plan to ensure the compliance of the latter will be available this October.

Superspecs

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the recent trial in Ghana of a newly invented self-adjusting pair of spectacles known as superspecs; and if she will make a statement. [1323]

Clare Short: The technology looks a promising way of tackling impaired eyesight in developing low income countries. We are continuing to support field testing, an introductory marketing programme, and, further development of the design and manufacturing technology of the adaptive spectacles to the point where they can be produced commercially in significant quantities.

Montserrat

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what aid the Government are providing to the people of Montserrat in respect of damage caused by the recent hurricane; and if she will make a statement. [1746]

Clare Short: I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

BBC Governors

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans she has to alter the number of the BBC governors; and what criteria he will use for the appointment of governors in the future. [1457]

Mr. Fisher: We have no current plans to alter the number of BBC Governors. Governors are appointed by Her Majesty The Queen on the recommendation of the Prime Minister. In giving advice on possible candidates, my right hon. Friend will seek to ensure that the body of Governors represents the interests of the population as a whole and that it has the authority and skills needed for its major public service role. He will also apply the principles established by the Nolan Committee as set out in guidance issued by the Office of the Commissioner for Public Appointments.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has to make the governors of the BBC more accountable to the public. [1456]

Mr. Fisher: As a public corporation, the BBC must be accountable to its audiences, to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, the custodian of its Charter and Agreement, and to Parliament. My right hon. Friend will be considering how the accountability of the BBC might be underscored, within the existing framework of the Charter and Agreement, in preparing his response to the National Heritage Select Committee's report, "The BBC and the Future of Broadcasting".

Television Licences

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Nnational Heritage what plans he has to review the cost of TV licences for pensioners on low incomes. [1827]

Mr. Fisher: The Government currently has no plans to review the concessionary television licence fee regulations.

National Lottery

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to use lottery funds to help end street homelessness in Britain by 2000. [1641]

Mr. Banks: The National Lottery Charities Board has already announced 446 grants with a total value of £66 million for projects to assist homeless people. Its fifth grant programme, targeted at improving people's living environment, specifically aims to tackle homelessness and its effects. The Government will also build on the Rough Sleepers Initiative, providing accommodation, outreach work and resettlement support, to ensure that there is no need for people to sleep rough.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what proportion of proceeds from the national lottery have gone to projects in the east midlands; and what plans he has to ensure additional national lottery proceeds are devoted to projects in the east midlands; [1460]

(2) what assessment he has made of the imbalance of allocation of national lottery funds between different regions; what steps he has taken to address imbalances of allocation; and if he will make a statement. [1459]

Mr. Banks: To date, 4 per cent. of the £3.373 billion awarded by National Lottery distributing bodies has been for projects in the East Midlands. It is clear that some areas of the country have benefited a great deal more from the Lottery than others. We will be looking at the reasons for this as part of our overall review of Lottery distribution and considering what changes might be made as a result.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will review the operation of commercial organisations offering services claiming to help people improve their chances of winning national lottery prizes; and if he will make a statement. [1435]

Mr. Banks: The selection of the winning numbers in the National Lottery is a random process and any claim that a commercial product will improve the chances of winning must therefore be false. There are products available which aim to assist players in choosing their numbers randomly. It is a matter for players to decide whether or not they wish to purchase such products.

Anyone who felt they had been misled by such a product would have recourse to the courts or local trading standards officers.

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if the proposed review of national lottery funding will include increased flexibility for grant applications for village halls within metropolitan areas. [1210]

Mr. Chris Smith: National Lottery distributing bodies are able to consider bids for improvements to, or the creation of, village halls or community facilities in any part of the United Kingdom. The distributors have produced a joint publication, 'Village and Community Halls–Guidance from the National Lottery distributing bodies', which offers advice to potential applicants. We will consider the need for greater flexibility over applications as part of our review of all aspects of the Lottery distribution system.

Tourist Boards

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has for increasing the English Tourist Board's funding to match that of the other tourist boards. [1653]

Mr. Tom Clarke: I shall be considering the funding for the English Tourist Board, and for the British Tourist Authority, alongside that for all the other areas for which I am responsible, in due course. Government support for tourism takes many forms, and cannot be measured solely in terms of grant to the tourist boards.

Seaside Piers

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to improve the state of Britain's seaside piers, with particular reference to Southport's pier. [1654]

Mr. Banks: Public funding for the restoration of historic piers is available from English Heritage (or the equivalent agency in Wales, Scotland or Northern Ireland) and from the National Heritage Memorial Fund. The NHMF has so far provided £3.3 million from Lottery proceeds for projects relating to historic piers. This includes a grant of £34,000 in February this year for a structural survey of Southport pier. I understand that the possibility of European Regional Development Fund support for the restoration of this pier is also under discussion.

Millennium Celebrations (East Lancashire)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what millennium celebrations are planned for east Lancashire. [1205]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Government expect that individuals and communities throughout the country will wish to organise their own celebrations to mark the Millennium, and I am sure there will be many such events in east Lancashire. The Millennium Commission has funded a number of projects in east Lancashire. These include the South Meadow Lane Centre in Preston, which has been awarded a grant of £1, 640,000; the Ribble Link project to create a new 5-mile stretch of canal linking some of the remaining green spaces in Preston, which has been awarded grant of £2,700,000; and the Forest of Burnley project, which has been awarded grant of £1,775,549.

The Commission has also funded umbrella projects covering the whole of the UK, such as the National Cycle Network, Millennium Greens and 21st Century Halls. Ten Churches in east Lancashire have reached stage two of the Church Floodlighting Trust, including St. Peter and St. Paul in Blackburn and St. James in Altham.

WALES

Dyslexia

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to increase provision for those children who are dyslexic; and if he will make a statement. [630]

Mr. Hain: Local education authorities and schools are responsible for ensuring that appropriate provision is made for children with special educational needs, including those who are dyslexic. The Welsh Office is continuing to make funds available to LEAs for the training of teachers of children with dyslexia, under the Grants for Education Support and Training (GEST) Programme. I will welcome views from the hon. Member.

Education Costs

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average annual cost of educating (a) a primary school pupil and (b) a secondary school pupil in Wales. [647]

Mr. Hain: The latest available information for Wales is for the financial year 1994–95. The expenditure per pupil in 1994–95 on LEA maintained nursery and primary schools in Wales was £1,637. The corresponding figure for LEA maintained secondary schools was £2,264.

Cancelled Operations

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many operations were cancelled on the day of, or the day after, admission to hospital by (a) health authority and (b) overall; and how many of those patients were not readmitted within a month for the fourth quarter of 1996–97. [793]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Information about the number of operations cancelled on the day of, or the day after admission is not collected centrally. The number of patients who were not readmitted within a month is not collected from individual health authorities. The overall figure for the number of patients not readmitted to Welsh hospitals within a month of a cancelled operation in the fourth quarter of 1996–97 was 413.

GP Surgeries

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what incentive schemes (a) currently exist and (b) are being examined by his Department, to encourage general practitioners to set up surgeries in the valleys of South Wales. [860]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I hope to make an announcement within a few weeks.

Community Doctors

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the availability of community doctors in Wales. [861]

Mr. Win Griffiths: None. The responsibility for the establishment of posts in community medicine is a matter for health authorities or trusts to consider having regard to locally assessed needs and circumstances.

Long-term Care

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to deal with problems relating to long-term care. [1113]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. and learned Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health on 20 May 1997, Official Report, column 58.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he proposes to take to reduce waiting lists; and if he will make a statement. [1112]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Alongside the top priority of managing medical admissions, and ensuring that adequate intensive care facilities are available, I intend that cutting waiting lists and reducing waiting times will continue to be a key priority for the NHS in Wales.

I expect the resources released through efficiency gains and the majority of the £1.9 million released by the suspension of 8th wave fundholding to be invested in these areas and in the improvement of local services for cancer patients.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of general practitioners are fundholders; and how many applications are outstanding. [1111]

Mr. Win Griffiths: There are 923 GPs (54 per cent.), in 233 GP Fundholding practices in Wales. A further 11 practices have expressed interest in the 8th Wave, but have not yet made formal application. I have decided to defer any approval of the 8th Wave until July 1998.

Nurses (North Wales)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide assistance to allow the North Wales health authority and North Wales hospital trusts to introduce more nurses. [1114]

Mr. Win Griffiths: No. Financial allocations for 1997–98 have already been made to the North Wales Health Authority.

River Pollution

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he proposes to reduce river pollution in Wales. [1303]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The latest information published by the Environment Agency shows that 91.4 per cent. of Welsh rivers are classified as good quality; 6.9 per cent. as fair; with only 1.7 per cent. classed as poor or bad quality. This compares with similar percentages of 59.5, 31.5 and 9.0 for the whole of England and Wales. The Government is committed to protecting the environment, including our rivers, and will put concern for the environment at the heart of future policy making.

Beef Market

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has for support for the beef market; and if he will make a statement. [1206]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The Government wishes to ensure the long term viability of the beef market. Any changes to support arrangements will be made as part of a strategy to ensure a sustainable beef industry in Wales and the rest of the United Kingdom.

Arable Area Payments

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the (a) maximum, (b) minimum and (c) average payment made under the arable area payments scheme in 1996–97. [1725]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The maximum payment made for a claim under the 1996 Arable Area Payment Scheme in Wales was for £142,497. The minimum payment was £148, and the average payment £5,025.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for the future of compulsory competitive tendering in Wales in advance of the introduction of a duty on local authorities to achieve best value. [1906]

Mr. Ron Davies: I have considered representations about the continuing difficulties that local authorities in Wales are facing in preparing for the reintroduction of Compulsory Competitive Tendering (CCT) given the pressures of reorganisation. I am of the view that I should take action to relieve these difficulties.

I intend to consult widely on a range of measures which I have in mind to achieve this objective while maintaining the pressure on local authorities to secure efficiencies in the delivery of services.

I propose to extend the moratorium on CCT until 1 October 1998.

Under the terms of the current moratorium, CCT has been generally suspended for work subject to the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 (the 1980 Act) and for activities covered by the Local Government Act 1988 (the 1988 Act). Throughout the moratorium period, CCT has continued to apply to works of construction under the 1980 Act where the value of the work exceeds £500,000. Under my proposals this requirement will continue to apply during the extended moratorium.

I will also continue to require local authorities to produce annual reports and to meet the financial objective specified under current CCT legislation (the 1980 and 1988 Acts) where work is carried out in-house during the extended moratorium. My Department will continue to monitor authorities' performance throughout the extended moratorium and will take appropriate action if authorities fail to submit reports or achieve the financial objective.

Under my proposals, on which I shall be consulting, CCT would be reintroduced from October 1998 for further elements of work covered by the 1980 Act. The purpose would be to extend the range of work beyond those large construction contracts which were subject to CCT under the terms of the moratorium. CCT for the remainder of work subject to the 1980 Act, and all activities subject to the 1988 Act, would be implemented on a phased and manageable basis during 1999.

With colleagues, I will be reviewing the existing CCT framework and will reassess the arrangements proposed for Wales in the light of the outcome of that review.

Our Manifesto gave a commitment to replace CCT with a duty on local authorities to achieve best value. While work on this is taken forward, I will encourage local authorities to take a positive view on the value of competitive tendering and to conclude properly those tendering exercises which are nearing completion.

I will also ask the Welsh Local Government Association to work with my Department, the Audit Commission and other Government Departments to develop a framework for piloting important features of a best value regime in advance of its formal introduction on a statutory basis.

HEALTH

Disclosure of Information

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will remove the right of NHS trusts to refuse to provide information as to their activities on the basis of such information being commercial in confidence. [26]

Mr. Milburn: The National Health Service is expected to respond positively to all requests for information. However, there may be circumstances where negotiations could be prejudiced by premature disclosure or where there is a duty to respect information given in confidence.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place a requirement on NHS trusts and health authorities to publish their business plans and planning documents relating to the services they provide or plan to provide. [28]

Mr. Milburn: National Health Service trusts and health authorities are expected to be open about their plans. They are required to make publicly available details about important proposals or health policies or changes in the way in which services are delivered. This information should be made available when proposals are announced, and before decisions are made. In addition, trusts are required to publish an annual business plan, describing their planned activity for the coming year. Both trusts and health authorities are also required to publish a summary strategic direction document (every three years for trusts and five years for health authorities) setting out their longer term plans for the delivery of health care services.

Civil Service (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many civil servants at each grade within his Department were of Asian origin on 5 May. [233]

Ms Jowell: The figures on 5 May 1997 were as follows:

As a percentage of staff in the payband

Payband	Number	Percentage
IP1	62	5
IP2 and Fast Stream	42	4
IP3	20	2
IP4 and above including Senior Civil Service	14	1
Total	138	3

These figures include data for the National Health Service Executive regional offices and the agencies. The figures for the Fast Stream payband and the Senior Civil Service have been amalgamated with other groups because of the small numbers involved, so as to ensure that individuals cannot be identified.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the financial information in respect of outstanding PFI bids for NHS hospital development contracts. [17]

Mr. Milburn: Information relating to outstanding Private Finance Initiative proposals may be made available from the National Health Service trusts concerned unless it affects on going negotiations. Additionally, NHS trusts must publish and make publicly available an annual report and audited accounts. Trusts have a requirement to include in their annual report a statement regarding PFI proposals and actions. In addition, trusts are required to analyse the impact of all significant items, including PFI deals, in the audited accounts.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the specifications for PFI-funded projects in (a) their original outline and (b) their current form. [19]

Mr. Milburn: Information on original and current specifications for capital investment projects may be obtained from the National Health Service trusts concerned, providing that it does not affect commercial negotiations.

Health Authority Funding

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each English health authority its deficit or surplus for 1996–97, its projected deficit or surplus for 1997–98 and the increase or decrease in its waiting lists over the last available year. [776]

Mr. Milburn: The information on the latest estimated surplus/deficit for 1996–97, of each English health authority will be placed in the Library. Plans for 1997–98 are still being agreed. Waiting list figures for each current English health authority are available from June 1996 and the latest available are for 31 December 1996, both of which have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health authorities have reported deficit problems relating to their funding arrangements in (a) the current and (b) the previous year. [1517]

Mr. Milburn: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies given to my hon. Friend the Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) and the hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) today.

Health authorities have a statutory responsibility to ensure that their net expenditure remains within their allocated cash limit. In 1996–97 all health authorities achieved this. All health authorities are required to remain within their cash limit for 1997–98.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date the problems of deficits currently having to be considered by ministers were first drawn to the attention of his Department. [1519]

Mr. Milburn: The National Health Service Executive monitors the performance of health authorities and trusts continually as part of a cycle of planning and regular monitoring reviews. Information on the financial position of health authorities and trusts is published quarterly and was placed in the Library on 17 March in response to a request from my hon. Friend the Member for York (Mr. Bayley).

Health Service Deficits

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health trusts and health authorities were in deficit on 1 April; and by what amounts. [1027]

Mr. Milburn: Plans for 1997–98 are still being agreed. Information on the 1996–97 quarter 4 position of all health authorities and trusts have been placed in the Library.

Ethnic Minority NHS Staff

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of (a) NHS managers, (b) general practitioners, (c) consultants/registrars and (d) nurses, by grade, are from ethnic minority backgrounds; and what steps he proposes to take to increase their numbers. [1046]

Mr. Milburn: Information about the ethnic origin of National Health Service hospital & community health services managers, nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff and hospital medical staff (including consultants and registrars) is contained in "NHS hospital and community health services non-medical workforce census; England as at September 1995: ethnic group tables" and "Hospital, Public Health Medicine and Community Health Service Medical and Dental staff in England 1985 to 1995", copies of which are available in the Library.

The Department has not collected data on ethnic origins of general practitioners or their staff to date. However, the Department holds data on Unrestricted Principals[1] by their country of qualification: 17 per cent. of Unrestricted Principals qualified outside the European Economic Area at 1 October 1995.

Chairs and Chief Executives of NHS trusts and health authorities are accountable for meeting the goals of "Ethnic minority staff in the NHS: a programme of action", the overall aim of which is to secure fair representation of ethnic minorities at all levels in the health service. Progress towards these goals forms part of the "NHS as a good employer" benchmark set out in the annual Priorities and Planning guidance, and the NHS Executive is working at a national level to promote and disseminate best practice.

[1] An Unrestricted Principal is a practitioner who provides the full range of general medical services and whose list is not limited to any particular group of persons.

Coffee (Heart Disease)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent research his Department has evaluated into possible links between the fatty material in coffee beans and the incidence of heart disease; and if he will make a statement. [1329]

Ms Jowell: In 1994 the Department published the Report of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food and Nutrition Policy on the nutritional aspects of cardiovascular disease, copies of which are available in the Library. The committee concluded that the evidence that caffeine or coffee consumption may contribute to the development of coronary heart disease (CHD) remains inconsistent and that coffee drinking as practised in the United Kingdom does not appear to affect CHD risk. The Department is aware of more recent Scandinavian research on the capacity of some components present in unfiltered, boiled coffee to raise blood cholesterol, and on the effect of method of preparation on its content of them. Given the different coffee drinking patterns in the UK, it is not clear whether this Scandinavian research is relevant to the incidence of heart disease in the UK.

NHS Trusts (Disciplinary Procedures)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the disciplinary procedures of NHS trusts with particular reference to offering trust employees the protection provided in paragraphs 189–90 of the 1994 Whitley Council Terms and Conditions of Service. [1337]

Mr. Milburn: The General Whitley Council protocol on disciplinary procedures was promulgated in February 1995 following the agreement of the Staff Side of the Council. The protocol aims to ensure disciplinary matters are resolved as quickly as possible at local employer level. There are no plans at present to review the procedures.

Drug Misuse Services

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the level of public funding for drug misuse services; what assessment he has made of the impact of the new methodology for allocating resources for drug misuse services on the level of funding allocated for East Lancashire; and if he will make a statement. [1439]

Ms Jowell: We have received a number of representations about the level of funding for drug misuse services. No particular assessment has been made of the impact on the new methodology for allocating resources for drug misuse services on the level of funding allocated for East Lancashire. The special allocation for drug misuse nationally has increased by over 9 per cent. in real terms in 1997–98 and the allocation to East Lancashire has increased by over 7 per cent.

Lariam

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the number of (a) deaths and (b) serious illnesses resulting from the use of lariam. [1486]

Ms Jowell: The Medicines Control Agency receives reports of suspected adverse reactions to licensed medicinal products via the Yellow Card Scheme. A report of a suspected reaction does not necessarily mean that it was caused by the medicine. However, as the scheme is voluntary, not all adverse reactions are reported.

There have been 685 reports of 910 suspected serious adverse reactions reported in association with mefloquine. Of these adverse reactions, 653 were neurological or psychiatric. The majority of these reactions were not clinically severe. The commonest reactions reported were depression, headache, anxiety and panic reactions. These are included as possible side-effects in the product information, which is provided to health professionals and patients.

Four deaths have been reported in association with mefloquine. Three are likely to be related to factors other than treatment with mefloquine. One patient died of a serious skin reaction which is very rare, but recognised as occurring in association with mefloquine and many other drugs.

Non-clinical Services

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what impact the Government's proposed changes in employment law will have on NHS employees providing non-clinical services; and if he will make a statement. [1293]

Mr. Milburn: The independent Low Pay Commission will recommend to the Government the initial level at which the National Minimum Wage might be set. It is too soon to say what the impact might be on National Health Service employees.

Care Beds

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many continuing or long-stay care beds were commissioned by each health authority in each year since 1993. [1333]

Mr. Boateng: Data are collected by broad ward classification rather than by clinical specialty in returns by individual National Health Service providers rather than by health authority. The complete set of data is available from the Library in the publication "Bed Availability for England" but there is no separate classification of continuing care or long stay care beds. One of the actions we have already taken is to ask officials to review the collection of continuing care commissioning data by health and local authorities.

Departmental Computer Systems

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to ensure that his Department's computer systems are millennium compliant; and if he will make a statement. [1247]

Mr. Milburn: The Department has carried out an inventory of all its computer systems and has produced an initial high level plan to address the problem. Testing for Year 2000 compliance will start in June. A fully costed, timed and prioritised programme of remedial work will be prepared in the Autumn.

Adoptions Procedure

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to reduce the (a) bureaucracy, (b) time and (c) cost involved in adoptions procedure. [1346]

Mr. Boateng: The Government intend to introduce new adoption legislation as soon as parliamentary time allows.

Human Growth Hormone

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have contracted Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease as a result of the cadaveric human growth hormone programme in Britain. [1810]

Ms Jowell: Twenty-one patients who were treated with human growth hormone in the United Kingdom have died of Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease. A further four are currently exhibiting symptoms consistent with the disease.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will consider no-fault compensation for those suffering illness as a result of the cadaveric human growth hormone programme. [1812]

Ms Jowell: I will write to my hon. Friend about this shortly.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what compensation has so far been awarded to those suffering illness as a result of the cadaveric human growth hormone programme. [1811]

Ms Jowell: We are still awaiting documentation from the legal representatives of those entitled to compensation to enable us to agree appropriate amounts.

Air Pollution

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the letter from Dr. Geoffrey Myddleton in the Lancet of 21/28 December 1996, vol. 348, No. 9043, page 1744. [1806]

Ms Jowell: Dr. Myddleton's letter contains outdated information on concentrations of polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbon compounds in London air. Current concentrations are less than 1 ng/m^3 (annual average) compared with 26–39 ng/m^3 (annual average concentration) in 1962. The risk to health posed by carcinogens in urban air is very much smaller than that posed by cigarette smoking.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the carcinogenic effect of benzo(a)pyrene; and what are the major sources. [1804]

Ms Jowell: The carcinogenic effects of benzo(a)pyrene were examined by the Department of Health Committee on the Carcinogenicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment (COC) in 1994. The Committee's conclusions were published in the COC Annual Report, copies of which have been placed in the Library. An updated assessment will be published in the 1996 Annual Report. The major sources of benzo(a)pyrene and other polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbon compounds in the air are the various forms of combustion of fossil fuels including, in urban areas, motor vehicles.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the atmospheric presence of 3,4-benzpyrene in London and its implications for health. [1805]

Ms Jowell: The concentration of 3,4-benzpyrene is measured for the Department of the Environment at a site in Marsham Street, SW1. Data are currently being considered by the Department of the Environment/ Department of Health Expert Panel on Air Quality Standards with a view to recommending an air quality standard. A report is expected in 1998.

Health Authorities (Funding)

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will amend the formula for funding district health authorities to include status as an off-shore community as a factor. [1771]

Mr. Milburn: We will continue with the research which has already been commissioned to investigate the possible extra costs associated with the provision of accident and emergency and ambulance services in rural areas; this includes looking at the effects of island status. A report is expected in the autumn and the results will be carefully considered.

North-East Essex Mental Health Services Trust

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will hold a full inquiry into the stewardship of the North-East Essex Mental Health Services NHS Trust, with particular reference to (a) the dispersal of patients from Severalls Hospital, Colchester and (b) the future of the (i) complex and (ii) site. [1553]

Mr. Boateng: North-East Essex Mental Health Services National Health Service Trust is responsible to those who commission services, principally North Essex Health Authority, for the patient care it provides. The NHS Executive and the Trust are in the process of determining the future of the site.

Disability

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to adopt a social model of disability in framing all future and amending previous relevant legislation and guidance; and if he will make a statement. [1672]

Mr. Boateng: Our manifesto commits us to establishing

"comprehensive, enforceable civil rights for disabled people against discrimination in society or at work, developed in partnership with all interested parties".

The Government will be consulting widely and developing our proposals in partnership with disability organisations, trade union and others. An essential issue will be the definition of disability. It is not appropriate for us to pre-empt the outcome of that consultation.

St. Mary's Hospital, Newport

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has had regarding the need for structural repairs at St. Mary's Hospital, Newport, Isle of Wight. [1772]

Mr. Milburn: Three letters have been received from members of the public regarding the need for structural repairs at St. Mary's Hospital, Newport, Isle of Wight.

NHS Trusts (Management)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to reform the structures relating to the management of NHS trusts in order to increase their accountability. [1551]

Mr. Milburn: The Government is working with the National Health Service to develop an action plan to end the internal market. As part of this we will consider whether any changes to the management of NHS trusts are required.

Cervical Smear Tests

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what written guidance has been issued by his Department on the proper completion of a cervical smear report record; whether the report card requires the reporting of the visual appearance of the cervix; and if it is his policy that reporting of the visual appearance of the cervix should take place. [1656]

Ms Jowell: The cervical cytology request form does not require smear takers to describe the visual appearance of the cervix in all cases. It is recommended that visibility of the cervix and a description be recorded in the woman's medical notes. The condition of the cervix should, however, be included on a request form where there is a suspected abnormality.

The importance of visual inspection of the cervix is emphasised in the British Society for Clinical Cytology's training video and booklet for smear-takers "Taking Cervical Smears" which was promulgated to the National Health Service under cover of EL(94)33. Copies of both these documents are available in the Library.

Secondary Care Services

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will increase the resources available for locally provided secondary care services to North and East Devon health authority for the 1997–98 financial year. [1313]

Mr. Milburn: We shall honour the Health Authority revenue allocations for 1997–98 agreed by the previous Government. Health Authorities are given general allocations for hospital and community health services to commission health care services for their resident population, whether locally or elsewhere. We will look at how resources are distributed across both secondary and primary care, to ensure that these fully reflect local population needs and operate as fairly as possible.

Rural Community Hospitals

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy toward local community hospitals in rural areas; and what advice or directions he is currently giving to local health authorities in that respect. [1281]

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will instruct North and East Devon health authority not to cease to commission health services at Lynton Hospital, North Devon, during the current financial year. [1314]

Mr. Boateng: We will be giving early consideration to issues relating to the configuration of hospital services, including the role of community hospitals. At the moment, it is for health authorities and trusts, in consultation with local general practitioners, to ensure that NHS services are responsive to public needs and wishes.

Longcare Homes

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the implications of the conviction of owners and staff of Longcare Homes for abuse and ill treatment of residents for the future regulation of such homes; and if he will make a statement. [1728]

Mr. Boateng: We are committed to securing quality services by creating a more comprehensive, more independent regulatory framework for homes and other social services which has the interests of users at heart. We will bring forward our proposals for achieving this in due course.

Genetic Screening

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) which health authorities fund carrier screening for cystic fibrosis; [1757]

(2) which health authorities fund neo-natal screening for cystic fibrosis; [1759]

(3) how much each health authority spent on genetic services as a percentage of their annual budget in the last year for which figures are available; [1758]

(4) how many health authorities fund pre-natal genetic screening and for which conditions; and if he will name them. [1756]

Ms Jowell: Information on screening for cystic fibrosis, genetic screening, and genetic services is not collected centrally by the Department of Health. The information is held by individual health authorities and trusts to whom a direct approach would have to be made.

Health Trusts (Funding)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health trusts have reported deficit problems relating to the funding arrangements in (a) the current and (b) the previous year. [1518]

Mr. Milburn: The number of National Health Service trusts forecasting deficits at Quarter 4 1996–97 will be placed in the Library shortly. These deficits may be caused by factors other than funding arrangements. Plans for 1997–98 are still being agreed.

Chronic Fatigue Syndrome

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional measures he plans to help sufferers of chronic fatigue syndrome. [1820]

Ms Jowell: Our main aims are:

(a) to continue to fund and sponsor research so that chronic fatigue syndrome (CFS)\mylagic encephalomyelitis (ME) and its causes are better understood;

(b) to help doctors to deal with patients suffering from the condition in a skilful and sympathetic way.

We will continue to support the voluntary sector to represent and help sufferers from the condition.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he proposes to increase research into ME. [1821]

Ms Jowell: Funding research into myalgic encephalomyelitis (ME) (otherwise known as chronic fatigue syndrome (CFS)) is considered alongside other priorities. The National Health Service Research and Development programme is funding a research project called "Should GPs manage chronic fatigue syndrome? A controlled trial".

The main agency through which the Government supports biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council. It is not currently funding any research into CFS\ME, but it always welcomes high-quality applications and these are judged in open competition with other demands for funding, and awarded according to their scientific quality.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

ENVIRONMENT AND THE REGIONS

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the increase in carbon dioxide emissions which will be caused by reducing VAT on domestic fuel. [653]

Angela Eagle: We have estimated that the reduction in VAT on domestic fuel to 5 per cent. will result in an increase in carbon dioxide emissions of about 0.9 million tonnes per year (equivalent to about a quarter of a million tonnes of carbon) by 2010. This represents about 0.15 per cent. of current carbon dioxide emissions. We shall be developing measures to reduce carbon dioxide measures in fields such as energy efficiency, renewable energy, combined heat and power, and our integrated transport strategy so as to deliver our proposed target of a 20 per cent. reduction in carbon dioxide emissions below 1990 levels by 2010.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what applications his Department is considering for the building of new clean coal plants in the United Kingdom. [1012]

Mr. Battle: I have been asked to reply.

No applications have been received under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989.

Porpoises

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to create special areas of conservation under the EU Habitats and Species directive for harbour porpoises; and if he will make a statement. [1073]

Angela Eagle: None. The available scientific evidence is insufficient to identify sites which meet the requirements set out in Article 4(1) of the Directive relating to aquatic species which range over wide areas.

Council Tax

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many properties in (a) Westminster and (b) Pendle are in council tax bands (i) A and (ii) H; and what percentage of the total number of properties in each council area this represents. [1100]

Nick Raynsford: The information requested is as follows:

Dwellings on the Valuation List as at 16 October 1996

	Band A	Percentage of total	Band H	Percentage of total
Westminster	1,300	1.2	12,233	11.4
Pendle	24,336	65.4	53	0.1

Merry Hill Inquiry

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he received the inspector's report on the Merry Hill inquiry. [1474]

Mr. Raynsford: The inspector's report on the Merry Hill inquiry was received by the Government Office for the West Midlands on 7 March 1997.

Energy Policy

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what plans the Government have (a) to change the current policy on energy saving and (b) to reduce emissions; [1349]

(2) what plans the Government have to encourage more (a) businesses and (b) homeowners to use energy saving technology. [1348]

Angela Eagle: The Government supports a range of initiatives, schemes and programmes to promote the use of energy saving and energy saving technology by homeowners, businesses, and other energy users, including the Home Energy Efficiency Scheme (HEES), the Energy Efficiency Best Practice Programme, and a number of programmes run by the Energy Saving Trust.

These and other initiatives will be reviewed in the context of the Government's commitment to lead the fight against global warming at the Kyoto conference in December, through a target of 20 per cent. reduction in carbon dioxide emissions by 2010. We will be reviewing our energy efficiency programmes, looking for improvements in all areas, including homeowners' and businesses' use of energy saving technology.

House Renovation Grants (Devon)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will increase the resources available to district councils in Devon for the provision of house renovation grants during the 1997–98 financial year. [1311]

Mr. Raynsford: Resources available to district councils in 1997–98 for house renovation grants were allocated in full as part of the Housing Investment Programme. However, the Government's Capital Receipts initiative will support priority schemes of local authorities which meet key objectives. It will be for local authorities to decide how to use any resources within the general objectives set. A consultation paper on proposals for taking forward the initiative will be issued shortly.

Wind Farms

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review policy guidance concerning wind farms. [1475]

Mr. Raynsford: Planning policy guidance on wind energy developments is contained in Planning Policy Guidance note 22, "Renewable Energy". The Government have no immediate plans to revise that guidance.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has in respect of planning guidance for wind farms in areas of outstanding natural beauty. [1310]

Mr. Raynsford: Planning policy guidance on wind energy developments, including developments in Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty, is contained in Planning Policy Guidance note 22, "Renewable Energy". Further advice on Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty is given in the recently issued revised Planning Policy Guidance note 7, "The Countryside—Environmental Quality and Economic and Social Development". The Government have no immediate plans to revise either guidance note.

Water Abstraction (Rivers)

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his policy on the abstraction of water from rivers; and what steps he is taking to protect vulnerable rivers from damage from lower flows of water as a consequence of abstraction. [1282]

Angela Eagle: Abstraction of water from rivers is subject to licensing requirements, set out in Chapter II of the Water Resources Act 1991 and administered by the Environment Agency. The Government announced on 19 May 1997 its intention to review the water abstraction licensing system, with a key aim of ensuring that the needs of the environment are given due weight.

The Environment Agency currently has targets to alleviate low flows in 36 kilometres of rivers in 1997–98 and in a further 32 kilometres in 1998–99.

Waste Disposal (Hurd Deep)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will meet representatives of the States of Jersey to discuss the report they commissioned from Professor Sir John Knill and Dr. Mike Romerill concerning the disposal of radioactive waste in the Hurd Deep. [1436]

Angela Eagle: It is for the States of Jersey to decide whether they wish to approach the United Kingdom Government on this matter. Officials of United Kingdom Departments meet representatives of the States of Jersey for briefing on a regular basis.

Partners in Technology Programme

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the levels of costs to (a) firms and (b) universities of making funding proposals under the Partners in Technology Programme in 1996; and what steps he intends to take to reduce costs to applicants for the 1997 programme. [1430]

Mr. Raynsford: From a small survey of applicants to the Partners in Technology scheme it has been estimated that the average cost to firms and universities of preparing a proposal in the 1996 round was about £5,000. I am conscious of the need to minimise such costs and my Department has been consulting on the appropriate guidance to issue to applicants.

Planning Schemes

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many planning schemes in respect of which he has used his call-in powers were awaiting a decision on 5 May; and what plans he has to review the call-in procedure. [1473]

Mr. Raynsford: On 5 May, 42 called-in planning applications in England were awaiting decision. The Government will keep the call-in procedure under review as part of the ongoing process of monitoring the planning system.

Living Earth Foundation (Report)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the report commissioned from the Living Earth Foundation into the effectiveness of the BRE best practice programme. [1432]

Angela Eagle: The Department commissioned PREST, (Policy Research Engineering, Science and Technology Institute at the University of Manchester), to carry out an independent review of the Energy Efficiency Best Practice Programme. The review, which was completed in 1996, concluded that the programme is an effective means of generating energy savings; comprehensively covers UK industry and buildings stock; and is well managed. The report on the review is scheduled for publication in the next few weeks and a copy will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Housing Finance

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made for each metropolitan borough of the money available from (a) housing capital receipts and (b) other capital receipts to finance a housing programme. [1506]

Mr. Raynsford: Local authorities have usable capital receipts which are available for any capital purpose (including housing). The accumulated and unspent usable capital receipts held by each metropolitan borough as at 31 March 1996 are set out in the table below. The table also shows the total of housing receipts set aside by these authorities between 1990–91 and 1995–96. However, individual authorities may have used these set aside receipts to repay debt or in lieu of further borrowing, however, and so may no longer retain them in the form of cash and investments.

We will be consulting the Local Government Association and local authorities on the Government's Capital Receipts initiative in due course. No decision about the basis on which resources are to be distributed to individual authorities will be made until that consultation process is complete.

Council House Sales

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the value of the set-aside receipts from the sale of council houses (a) in total and (b) since 1990 for (i) England, (ii) Manchester and (iii) Trafford. [1633]

Mr. Raynsford: Between 1990–91 and 1995–96, the value of housing receipts set aside from the sale of local authority housing and associated land in England was £5,283 million. The corresponding figure for Manchester was £63.0 million and for Trafford £10.3 million. However, individual authorities may have used these receipts to repay debt or in lieu of further borrowing and so may no longer retain them in the form of cash and investments. No information is available on the value of receipts set aside before 1990–91.

Former British Local Properties

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what plans he has to assist Leicester Housing Association to improve the ex-British Coal properties under its ownership in North Nottinghamshire; [1818]

(2) if he plans to remove the embargo on the application of social housing grants to the improvement of former British Coal properties. [1817]

Mr. Raynsford: We have no immediate plans to remove the bar on the application of social housing grant to the improvement of former British Coal properties, although we intend to look again at this issue. Any reconsideration of the policy will, however, need to take into account the wider issues of using grant to pay for repairs or improvements to stock transferred to housing associations from ex public sector landlords, and will need to ensure that any such expenditure represents good value for money.

Earth Summit (New York)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he plans to put before the Earth summit II in New York in June; and if he will make a statement. [1749]

Angela Eagle: We are working with our partners in the European Union to ensure that the meeting results in a renewal of the Rio objectives, and in particular for advances on climate change, forests, fresh water, oceans and energy.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions by what means his Department makes available its publications in (a) Braille, (b) audio tape and (c) large print; and how this is publicised. [1689]

Angela Eagle: The provision of information in alternative formats is decided on an individual project or campaign basis, taking into account communication objectives, intended audience, and the requirements of the Disability Discrimination Act.

The availability of information for the blind and partially sighted is publicised in a variety of ways including:

- public advice centres, such as local authorities, libraries, and Citizens' Advice Bureaux;
- specialist events, conferences and exhibitions, such as NAIDEX;
- joint publicity initiatives with the RNIB;
- audio tape distribution, including the Central Office of Information (COI) Sound Advice network;
- individual requests and orders to the Department of the Environment and the Department of Transport;
- the Internet.

Plutonium Waste

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research proposals he has developed in order to develop a technically feasible and economically viable strategy for plutonium disposal. [1790]

Mr. Meacher: No specific research proposals on this issue have been developed, but a current study of the requirements for a research strategy for the disposal of high-level radioactive waste and spent nuclear fuel will be considering the possible implications of co-disposal of surplus plutonium.

Transmitter Masts

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to give local planning authorities greater powers to restrict the inappropriate siting of transmitter masts for mobile phone networks. [1527]

Mr. Raynsford: The Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995 grants a general planning permission for certain telecommunications masts providing:

- the mast is erected by a telecommunications code system operator licensed by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry under the Telecommunications Act 1984;
- the mast does not exceed 15 metres in height;
- the mast is not erected in a protected area such as National Park, area of outstanding natural beauty or conservation area; and
- the mast is not refused prior approval by the local planning authority within the 28 day period specified in the Order. The authority must be given the opportunity to say whether they wish to approve, within 28 days, details of the mast's siting and appearance, and are able to refuse approval if they consider there to be a serious threat to amenity.

Full planning permission is normally required for any mast which does not meet these criteria. In all cases the local authority had the opportunity to influence the siting of the mast.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he proposes to take to replace compulsory competitive tendering with a duty on local authorities to achieve best value. [1775]

Ms Armstrong: Well run local authorities which deliver high standard services are vital to the quality of people's lives. We are therefore very keen to press ahead with our Manifesto commitment to replace Compulsory Competitive Tendering (CCT) with a duty on local authorities to achieve best value and we will make this change as soon as Parliamentary time allows. We are using the interim period to talk to local government, the business community and others to ensure that the new framework is efficient and imaginative, but realistic, and makes the most of what local authorities, the private sector and the local community can contribute.

Achieving best value will not just be about economy and efficiency, but also about effectiveness and the quality of local services. The new framework will be a demanding challenge to local authorities, seeking continuous improvements in service costs and quality. It will be a permissive framework which emphasises local choices and local accountability. But it will also ensure that every local authority makes improvements. I am today writing to the Local Government Association to consult them on a draft statement of principles about best value which encapsulate these points. A copy of this letter will be placed in the Library.

We intend to encourage authorities to develop the principles of best value and pursue innovative approaches to service delivery in advance of primary legislation on best value. We have therefore agreed with the Local Government Association that Government will seek, where possible and within the existing statutory framework, to relax CCT for a selected number of authorities on condition that they follow a best value regime. We will set out shortly criteria against which authorities' bids will be considered—including a requirement to publish the authority's plans for improving the quality of services, enhancing efficiency and reducing costs to the taxpayers. The criteria will also reflect our view that competition will be an important management tool and test of best value, but that it will not be the only such tool.

Because the bulk of local authorities will continue to be subject to the existing CCT regime, we will also carry out an urgent review of existing regulations and guidance to make it work better and, to the extent that it is consistent with existing CCT legislation, introduce elements of best value. The Review, which will take 4–6 weeks, will be carried out in consultation with the LGA and other interested parties. Among other matters we will specifically be considering the question of timetables, including those for authorities who are subject to recent reorganisation. The Government will then consult on proposals with a view to laying new regulations and guidance in the summer. In the meantime, local authorities must continue to plan for meeting existing statutory obligations.

We have an open mind on whether services are delivered by the private sector or directly within the public sector. Either way there needs to be an effective partnership, and fair and open competition where this is called for. To achieve this, we accept that direct service organisations should be able to compete for work where it makes sense to do so. So we are reviewing the framework within which local authorities carry out work for others. We are also to review the restriction on factors which local authorities can take into account in awarding contracts consistent with our obligations under European Community rules.

These proposals should leave no doubt that Government intends to pursue a rigorous alternative approach to the improvement of local services, confident of its success in partnership with local government and the private sector.

Secondary Liquid Fuels

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to make a further response to the Second report of the Environment Committee on the burning of secondary liquid fuels in cement kilns (HC 497, Session 1994–95). [1514]

Angela Eagle: The previous Government responded, in June 1996, to the Environment Committee's report on the burning of secondary liquid fuels in cement kilns. We plan no further response. The Government will respond shortly, however, to the Committee's report on the environmental impacts of cement manufacture, published in March this year.

Capital Receipts (London)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the total available capital receipts for each London borough; and when they will be available for capital housing spending. [1754]

Mr. Raynsford: Information about the usable capital receipts available in each London borough was given in my answer to my hon. Friend on 20 May 1997 [Official Report, column number 48]. The table below provides further information the total of housing receipts set aside by these authorities between 1990–91 and 1995–96. Individual authorities may have used these receipts to repay debt or in lieu of further borrowing, however, and so may no longer retain them in the form of cash and investments.

Revenue Support Grant

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will amend the formula for calculating the revenue support grant to include status as an off-shore community as a factor. [1770]

Mr. Raynsford: We are committed to a fair distribution of Government grant. We will discuss with the Local Government Association any possible changes in the formulae which local government wishes us to consider. I would not want to anticipate the arguments which might be put forward for and against any particular change.

Global Warming

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when his Department forecasts global average temperatures to be more than 0.5 degree centigrade above the 1951 to 1980 global average; and if he will make a statement. [1750]

Angela Eagle: Research by the Hadley Centre, supported by my Department, shows that the net effect of warming due to man-made greenhouse gases, coupled with cooling due to man-made sulphate particles, is expected to lead to global average temperatures of more than 0.5 degree centigrade above the 1951–80 average during the first decade of the next century.

Disability

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to adopt a social model of disability in framing all future and amending previous relevant legislation and guidance; and if he will make a statement. [1690]

Angela Eagle: Our Manifesto commits us to establishing "comprehensive, enforceable civil rights for disabled people against discrimination in society or at work, developed in partnership with all interested parties". In developing and amending legislation and guidance, my Department will seek to ensure that this commitment is implemented.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what arrangements he has made with the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in respect of their joint responsibilities under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993 and the Environment Act 1995. [1791]

Mr. Meacher: My right hon. Friends will consult each other in the exercise of their shared responsibilities under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993 as amended by the Environment Act 1995.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if it is his policy to include representatives from NGOs with an expertise in nuclear waste on the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee. [1781]

Mr. Meacher: Decisions on the membership of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee will be taken in the light of the recent financial management and policy review, the recommendations of which are being considered.

Strategic Authority for London

Mr. Casale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if it is his policy that European Union nationals, who are resident in London, will be able to take part in the proposed referendum to restore a strategic authority to London. [1807]

Mr. Raynsford: This is an issue which will be covered in the forthcoming Consultation Document. If the franchise for the referendum follows the local government franchise, European Union nationals resident within the designated area would be entitled to vote.

Area Cost Adjustment

Ms Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the area cost adjustment mechanism. [1536]

Mr. Raynsford: I will want to look again at the area cost adjustment. The Department has commissioned further work on some of the concerns raised in response to the Review of the Area Cost Adjustment during 1996. I will also want to listen carefully to the views of local government about the adjustment before coming to conclusions about the way forward.

Asbestos

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will press for (a) a Europe-wide ban on the import of asbestos and asbestos products, (b) the introduction of a system for registering asbestos products in public buildings and (c) further regulation of the asbestos removal licensing system. [1699]

Angela Eagle: I appreciate the concerns of the hon. Member on this matter. The Government is determined to deal effectively with all aspects of the asbestos problem. The Health and Safety Commission has already put in hand urgent work to support the EU activity to ban the supply of all asbestos, with exceptions for essential users; to consider the feasibility of registering asbestos in public buildings; and to review the asbestos removal licensing system. I will be discussing these issues with the Health and Safety Commission shortly.

Homelessness

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce a rent deposit scheme for homeless people beginning private tenancies. [1752]

Mr. Raynsford: We will consider very carefully the potential for introducing rent deposit and guarantee schemes as we develop our policies on homelessness and on the private rented sector.

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what proposals he has for modernising the law relating to water and sewerage, with special reference to adoption arrangements for private sewers; [1101]

(2) what assessment he has made of the consultation paper on water and sewerage law, 1986; and what steps he intends taking to ensure that developers construct sewers to sufficient standards to pass building regulations. [1102]

Angela Eagle: The Review of Water and Sewerage Law carried out in 1986 considered responsibilities for water supply pipes and lateral drains which link properties to the public sewer. We have no plans at present for water companies to take over ownership of that part of the water pipe or lateral drain which is the responsibility of the householder. But we have recently announced that we expect all water companies to provide a free leakage detection and repair service for supply pipes. All private sewers and drains must be constructed to the standard laid down in the Building Regulations. If they are to be adopted as public sewers by the sewerage undertaker they must be built to the set requirements used by all undertakers which are of a higher standard. We have no plans at present to make any changes to the current legislation with regard to the adoption of private sewers.

TRANSPORT

South West Trains

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the total amount payable in fines by South West Trains following the cancelled and delayed services in (a) February and (b) March, indicating the date by which these fines must be paid. [30]

Ms Glenda Jackson: South West Trains have been penalised under the incentive regime in the franchise agreement. South West Trains paid the Franchising Director just over £900,000 for poor performance in January to March.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the total amount of subsidy which South West Trains will receive over the length of its franchise. [1141]

Ms Jackson: In 1995–96 and 1996–97 South West Trains received £72.682 million in cash inclusive of payments under the performance incentive regime. From 1997–98 to the end of the franchise in 2002–2003 South West Trains is estimated to receive £310.139 million in current prices, excluding performance incentive regime payments.

Liverpool Airport

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has for the expansion of Liverpool airport. [816]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Environment and Transport Ministers are currently considering the report by the Inspector at the Public Inquiry into Liverpool Airport plc's applications for phased development of the airport. A decision on the application will be made in due course.

Wyre Piddle Bypass

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on what criteria he will assess future bids for funding for the Wyre Piddle bypass; and if he will make a statement. [1037]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Guidance will shortly be issued to local authorities on their bids for support for capital expenditure on transport infrastructure in 1998–99.

Car Use

Mr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consideration he has given to the applicability to the United Kingdom of Californian State Ordinance XV requiring large employers to make and publish travel-to-work plans for their employees which minimise car use; and if he will make a statement. [843]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government is keen to encourage employers from both the public and private sector to find ways of reducing the impact on the environment of their employees' travel patterns, particularly their commuting journeys. One of the ways in which employers can do this is to introduce company travel plans for their employees. A growing number of organisations in the UK have already successfully implemented programmes of this nature, for example, Boots, BAA and Nottinghamshire County Council. A travel plan will soon be introduced at Stockley Park. Many local authorities are working with businesses to develop similar measures as part of their TravelWise programmes. The Government will attach a high priority to promoting the introduction of more company travel plans. To this end, we have been working with Transport 2000 on their document, "Changing Journeys to Work: an employers' guide to green commuting plans" which we are helping to launch on 4 June 1997.

Road Tax

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of (a) cars, (c) commercial vehicles and (c) motor bikes which are on the road without a road tax licence for the most recent year for which figures are available. [1019]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A roadside survey involving over one million vehicles conducted in 1994 estimated that the numbers evading vehicle excise duty (VED) are as follows:

	Unlicensed stock in use (thousand)	Unlicensed stock as a percentage of stock in use
Private and Light Goods	864	3.7
Motorcycle	371	35.0

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for new measures to reduce the loss in revenue from motorists not paying their road tax. [1830]

Ms Jackson: New initiatives include measures to improve the quality of the vehicle register and make it more difficult to drop out of the licensing system through the introduction of Dual Notification and Statutory Off-Road Notification schemes; the introduction of a national scheme to wheelclamp and impound unlicensed vehicles later this year; and the trialling of camera technology to automate the detection process.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what schemes exist to deal with motorists who fail to pay their road tax. [1828]

Ms Jackson: Police and traffic wardens detect unlicensed vehicles as part of their normal duties and report them to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency (DVLA) for follow-up action, including prosecution.

The Agency and the police also conduct "blitz campaigns" throughout the country. These take the form of extensive localised publicity to encourage motorists to relicense their vehicles, or risk being caught in subsequent police checks.

Police and traffic wardens place conspicuous red notices on the windscreens of parked unlicensed vehicles. These advise motorists that an offence has been detected and that they should take out a licence immediately.

Further new initiatives are being developed to supplement the current enforcement effort and reduce the level of VED evasion.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of motorists who failed to pay their road tax in the last year; and what was the estimated loss of revenue. [1829]

Ms Jackson: The number of unlicensed vehicles in use on the public road in Great Britain at the end of December 1996 was estimated at 1.5 million. The estimated loss through evasion in 1996–97 was £175 million which represents 4.1 per cent., of the revenue due.

Great North Eastern Railways

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the length of franchise currently operated by Great North Eastern Railways; and what plans he has to allow for the franchise to be lengthened. [1142]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The franchise term runs for seven years from April 1996. We have no plans to allow for the term to be lengthened.

Crossrail

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the future of Crossrail. [1129]

Ms Glenda Jackson: On 2 April 1996, the then Secretary of State for Transport announced that he had asked the Chairman of Railtrack to consider the project further. We will consider the future of Crossrail in the light of both Railtrack's views when received, and our own priorities for transport in London.

Minor Works Schemes

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to initiate a review of the funding for the transport minor works schemes. [1137]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The government will be giving consideration over the coming months to the funding of local transport infrastructure including support for minor schemes.

Public Service Obligation Grant

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the public service obligation grant for each of the last 10 years. [1140]

Mrs. Glenda Jackson: The information requested, for the seven years from 1987–88 to 1993–94 is as follows:

Year	Public Service Obligation Grant Payments (£ million)
1987–88	794
1988–89	473
1989–90	501
1990–91	602
1993–94	930

Since 1 April 1994, support for passenger rail services has been provided by the Franchising Director. The amount of grant paid, for the three years 1994–95 to 1996–97, is as follows:

Year	Public Service Obligation Grant Payments (£ million)
1994–95	1,783
1996–97	1,813

Channel Tunnel

Mrs. Dunwoody. To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list the contractual obligations on London and Continental Railways to introduce daytime and night sleeper services from north of London to the continent via the channel tunnel; [1149]

(2) what powers he has to ensure that London and Continental introduce overnight sleeper services from north of London to the continent via the channel tunnel. [1147]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The provision of regional day and night services through the Channel Tunnel is a commercial matter for London and Continental Railways, who are contractually obliged to promote a Transport and Works Act Order for a link between the West Coast Main Line and the Channel Tunnel Rail Link. This link would be used by regional services. LCR accordingly lodged an application in January and I hope that Parliament will soon have the opportunity to debate it.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects daytime through services from north of London through the channel tunnel to be introduced; and what steps he has taken or expects to take to encourage the introduction of these services. [1146]

Ms Jackson: London and Continental Railways, along with their European railway partners are responsible for international passenger services through the Channel Tunnel. I understand that they plan to start regional services to and from Paris this year.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list the contributions made by Her Majesty's Government for the purchase of the British Eurostar trains which were given to London and Continental Railways; and if he will list the annual repayments to Her Majesty's Government and when the payments will terminate; [1150]

(2) if he will list the contributions made by Her Majesty's Government and British Rail in the building, preparation and introduction of Eurostar sleeper services; and which of these funds are recoverable. [1148]

Ms Jackson: These trains are all owned or leased by Eurostar (UK) Ltd. (EUKL). EUKL, (previously European Passenger Services Ltd.) was transferred to London and Continental Railways (LCR) on 31 May 1996 as an integral part of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link project. An explanatory memorandum on the contracts and agreements between the Government and LCR is in the Library. While European Passenger Services was in Government ownership (9 May 1994 to 31 May 1996), direct grants totalling £423.7 million were made towards running costs and investment. No specific sums were, however, earmarked for the purchase of Eurostar trainsets, or for the introduction of European sleeper services. These grants are not recoverable but there are provisions in the Transfer Agreements for the EUKL assets and liabilities to revert to Government in the event that LCR should fail.

Rail Privatisation

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the total amount spent on lawyers, accountants, consultants and other professionals for the purposes of privatising the railways. [1127]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Expenditure by the Department of Transport, the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising, and the Office of the Rail Regulator since 1992–93 is as follows:

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
Lawyers	1.4	4.7	10.7	17.5	10.6
Accountants	1.7	2.0	5.0	8.8	8.7
Other Consultants and Professionals	2.4	5.8	11.7	25.4	21.1

Expenditure by British Rail and Railtrack is a matter for the organisations themselves, but we understand that their total privatisation costs to the end of 1996–97 were as follows:

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
British Rail	—	92	85	101	54
Railtrack	—	—	46	32	[1]—

[1] Railtrack was privatised in May 1996.

Any breakdown of the figures for BR and Railtrack would be for the organisations themselves to provide.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which aspects of the rail franchising and privatisation process he plans to refer to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. [1135]

Ms Glenda Jackson: As part of our current review of railway regulation, we will form a view on whether any of the privatised rail businesses should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. On 22 May 1997, the President of the Board of Trade announced that, under the Fair Trading Act 1973, she had decided to refer to the MMC the acquisition by National Express Group plc of the ScotRail and Central Trains rail franchises.

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the regulatory framework for the privatised railways. [1503]

Ms Jackson: Regulation of the rail industry, and the sanctions available to the regulators, need to be strengthened. We have started thorough review of rail regulation to identify exactly what improvements need to be made.

Rail Regulation

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he plans to take to strengthen the regulatory framework for the railways. [1151]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have made it clear that the regulation of the rail industry, and the sanctions available to the regulators, need to be strengthened. We have started a thorough review of rail regulation to identify exactly what improvements need to be made.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to amend the general authority given to the Rail regulator. [1134]

Ms Jackson: At present I have no plans to amend the general authority. We are currently conducting a thorough review of rail regulation to identify exactly what improvements need to be made.

British Flagged Vessels

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the number and tonnage of British flagged vessels in (a) 1978 and (b) 1996. [1130]

Ms Jackson: The number and tonnage of British flagged vessels (trading vessels of 500gt and over registered in the United Kingdom and the Crown Dependencies) in 1978 and 1996 is as follows:

	Number of vessels	Gross tonnage (in thousands)	Deadweight tonnage (in thousands)
1978	1,421	28,078	46,327
1996	377	6,057	7,835

Transport Pricing

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on Commissioner Kinnock's White Paper on fair transport pricing. [1126]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government welcome the broad principles outlined in the European Commission Green Paper, which seeks to encourage more environmentally friendly, fairer and more efficient use of transport. The Government also support the need for further study and debate on the issues raised, including those of subsidiarity.

Driving Instruction

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations his Department has received in the last 12 months on motorway driving instruction and examination for (a) car drivers and (b) other divers; what plans he has to make training and instruction on motorway driving compulsory for all drivers; and if he will make a statement. [1081]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department has received eight representations in respect of car drivers, including one from my hon. Friend the Member for Burnley. There have been none in respect of drivers of other categories of vehicle, though in any case drivers who hold a full car licence and are learning to drive larger vehicles may practice in them on motorways. We have no plans to make motorway training compulsory for any class of learner driver.

West Coast Main Line

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the amounts of public funds which will be spent on the modernisation of the west coast main line. [1136]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Railtrack is committed to spend £1.5 billion on the modernisation and upgrade of the West Coast Main Line funded by access charges paid by the train operators using the route. The upgrade to provide tilting trains and faster line speeds is being paid for by Virgin, the InterCity West Coast franchisee. Virgin is receiving £76.8 million subsidy in its first full financial year, reversing to a premium payment of £220.3 million to OPRAF in 2011/2012.

We have made it clear that we expect higher levels of investment in the network and are considering whether the regulatory regime in place is sufficient to ensure the delivery of that level of investment.

Franchising Director

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to issue new objectives, instructions and guidance to the Franchising Director. [1152]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are currently conducting a thorough review of rail regulation, in line with the Government's commitment to introduce tougher regulation of the privatised rail industry. A key element in this review will be to determine how the objectives, instructions and guidance we issue to the Franchising Director should be revised to reflect the Government's policy priorities.

London Underground

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out his Department's investment plans for the London underground system for the next five years. [1072]

Ms Glenda Jackson: London Transport's planned levels of investment in the Underground, based on the expenditure plans inherited from the previous Government, are set out in the table below. The Government is carrying out a comprehensive spending review. We are also giving urgent consideration to the options for increasing the level of investment in the Underground through Public/Private Partnerships.

Year	Investment [1,2] (£ million)
1997–98	312.6
1998–99	215.3
1999–00	369.5
2000–01	422.9
2001–02	447.3
2002–03	456.6

Notes:
[1] 1997–98 price.
[2] Does not include investment in the Jubilee Line Extension, investment in the core network which is part of the JLE project and privately financed investment.

Speed Limiters

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans his Department has to introduce legislation requiring new vehicles to be fitted with on-board variable speed limiters; and if he will make a statement. [1076]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department's research programme includes looking at the variable technology but we have no plans at present to introduce legislation.

London Buses

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if it is the Government's policy to ensure that buses in the capital are predominantly London red in colour; [1708]

(2) if it is the Government's policy to ensure that when existing tenders to run London bus routes expire, the new tender requires the operator to use a fleet of buses bearing the red London livery. [1709]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This is a matter for London Transport Buses. Their current policy is to require operators submitting bids for routes which operate within Central London to use predominantly red livery. The only exception to the above policy is for incumbent operators who are re-bidding for central London routes where the vehicles used are not currently red.

Outside the central area operators may adopt their own livery subject to approval by London Transport Buses.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many passengers per annum use London bus routes (a) not bearing and (b) bearing the London red livery. [1712]

Ms Jackson: In the financial year 1996–97 London Transport estimate that just over 80 per cent. of the 1,234 million journeys made on London Transport bus services were on vehicles with a predominantly red London livery.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which London bus route tenders (a) expired in the last six months and (b) are due to expire in the next six months. [1710]

Ms Jackson: London bus service contracts which expired between 1 December 1996 and 31 May 1997 are as follows:

20, 35, 40, 42, 54, 75, 91, 108, 167, 184, 190, 204, 206, 298, 310, 311, 345, 362, 391, 462, 617, 624, 629, 638, 661, 851, 931, E1, E2, E3, E4, E5, E6, E7, E8, E9, H40, N91, W13D.

London bus service contracts which are due to expire between 1 June 1997 and 30 November 1997 are as follows:

14, 16, 21, 24, 32, 34, 38, 39, 57, 63, 64, 65, 71, 74, 83, 85, 86, 90, 102, 127, 128, 129, 130, 150, 156, 170, 192, 197, 213, 221, 265, 281, 289, 312, 314, 364, 369, 371, 406, 465, 479, 499, 632, 650, 16A, 64A, 112D, 371D, N14, N21, N24, N38, W2, X30.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which London bus routes are not serviced by buses bearing the London red livery. [1711]

Ms Jackson: The following London Transport bus routes are operated with vehicles which do not carry the London red livery:

Bus Industry

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce a new regulatory framework for the bus industry. [1138]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government is committed to the proper regulation of bus services at the local level, with partnerships between local councils and bus operators an essential component, as part of the development of a balanced transport system. I am examining how best to implement that commitment.

Roads (Leicester)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will include the Leicester Eastern Bypass in the Private Finance Initiative scheme. [1471]

Ms Glenda Jackson: As the Leicester Eastern Bypass is not included in the current National Trunk Roads Programme it would be for the local planning and highway authorities to decide whether to seek to progress a scheme under the Private Finance Initiative.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to oppose the building of the Leicester A46/A47 Link Road and Eastern District Distributor Road through densely populated areas of the Leicester East constituency. [1492]

Ms Jackson: As with all local highway schemes, the Secretary of State's involvement with the A46/A47

Eastern District Distributor Road is limited to consideration of applications for their possible funding, through Transport Supplementary Grant (TSG), and the determination of any statutory Orders applications which may be made, by the local highway authority, to enable the schemes to proceed. In both cases, applications must be considered on their merits. That said, the Secretary of State's decision in relation to statutory Orders, made in respect of the A46/A47 Link Road, will be issued very soon. To date orders have been submitted for consideration in respect of the Eastern District Distributor Road.

Roads (Leicester)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will assess the advantages of extending the Leicester Eastern Bypass to a new junction south of exit 21 on the M1. [1472]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No, because the Leicester Eastern Bypass scheme is no longer in the National Trunk Road programme.

Jubilee Line Extension

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the progress of the Jubilee Line extension; and when he expects the works to be complete. [1819]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Tunnelling for the Jubilee Line extension is now complete and the rest of the associated civil engineering construction work is drawing to a close, while the electrical and mechanical engineering work is well under way. London Transport aims to open the line by the end of September 1998.

A40 (De-trunking)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the time scale for progress towards de-trunking the A40 through Cheltenham. [1254]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Objectives received following the publication of a draft Order to de-trunk the A40 through Cheltenham and to trunk the A436 from the A40 at Shipton Solers to the A417 at Air Balloon roundabout are currently being considered. The timescale for the de-trunking depends on the possible need for a public inquiry.

Road Works (A40)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the completion of the A40 road works in Acton and Shepherd's Bush. [1361]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are committed to a strategic review of the Road Programme. The terms of reference are not yet settled so you will appreciate that I cannot say what the effects of the review will be for this scheme.

Bus Services

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the regulation of bus services (a) inside and (b) outside London. [1504]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government is committed to the proper regulation of bus services at the local level, with partnerships between local councils and bus operators an essential component, as part of the development of a balanced transport system. I am examining how best to implement that commitment, recognising that circumstances in London differ from the rest of the country.

Departmental Spending Limits

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he plans to stay within the Department of Transport's spending limits for the next financial year as set out in the Budget Statement in November. [1507]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Like other Departments, the Department of Transport is reviewing its objectives and priorities within the published expenditure limits set for 1997–98 and 1998–99.

Speed Limits

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will commission research on the relationship between lower speed limits and the reduction of (a) road deaths and (b) vehicle noise and emission pollution. [1315]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department already has a programme of research which investigates these questions. A wide range of recent and current research projects has been commissioned by the Department which include investigations into the relationship between speed, road safety and the environment. The content of the research programme is reviewed each year. I have written to the hon. Member with details of this research. Copies of the letter have been placed in the libraries of both Houses.

SCOTLAND

Local Business Rates

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to discuss with COSLA the collection and distribution of local business rates; and if he will make a statement. [575]

Mr. Chisholm: All these matters are under consideration and we will consult with interested parties, including COSLA.

Civil Service (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to increase the number of employees from ethnic minorities within his Department. [229]

Mr. Dewar: The Scottish Office is an employer committed to equal opportunities for all staff and we monitor the recruitment of men and women whatever their background to ensure that no discrimination takes place.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many civil servants at each grade within his Department were of Asian origin on 5 May. [228]

Mr. Dewar: The headcount of staff of Asian origin employed in the Scottish Office and it's Executive Agencies at 1 May 1997 is shown in the table.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the proposed changes to the operation of compulsory competitive tendering in local government. [580]

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce a moratorium on compulsory competitive tendering for local government contracts. [1084]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 22 May 1997]: I am keen to press ahead with our Manifesto commitment to replace Compulsory Competitive Tendering with a new best value regime. After discussion with Scottish local government, I plan to move ahead quickly to develop the elements of this regime. Competitive discipline will form an important part of the new regime, but will no longer be the only method by which value for money in local government is improved.

I therefore intend to lay Regulations as soon as possible to suspend for a further year the planned reintroduction of CCT under both the Local Government Planning, and Land Act 1980 and the Local Government Act 1988. The statutory basis of the system will remain in place to be reactivated after July 1998 as necessary. White collar CCT, including housing management, would then be scheduled to start on or after April 1999. The suspension of CCT will allow time to start developing an alternative system to demonstrate best value in the provision of all council services. Authorities who are able to demonstrate significant progress towards achieving the key elements of the new best value regime will be able to apply for continued exemption, on an individual basis, from aspects of the CCT regime. In the meantime, however, I have made it clear that I expect councils to deal responsibly with tenders they have under way, consistent with their statutory duty to make proper arrangements for securing economy, efficiency and effectiveness in the provision of services. Decisions on the award of contracts will be subject to audit in the usual way.

I have agreed with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities that a task force of officials from the Scottish Office, COSLA and the Accounts Commission for Scotland will develop the key elements of a best value approach. The first meeting of the task force will take place today.

Because of the immediate pressure on authorities from the existing timetable for the reintroduction of CCT in Scotland I indicated how I intended to proceed at a meeting with COSLA on 27 May. I have placed a copy of the relevant press statement in the Library.

NHS Treatment Costs

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average cost of NHS treatment per patient in Scotland. [650]

Mr. Galbraith: The average cost of acute hospital treatment per patient in the Scottish Health Service in 1996–97 was £850 for an inpatient and day case and £150 for an outpatient.

Education Costs

Mr Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average annual cost of educating (a) a primary pupil and (b) a secondary pupil in Scotland. [646]

Mr. Wilson: Current expenditure per pupil in local authority schools in Scotland in the financial year 1994–95, the latest year for which information is currently available, was £1,797 in the primary sector and £2,874 in the secondary sector.

Feu System

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to (a) reform or (b) abolish the feu system. [1065]

Mr. McLeish: The Scottish Law Commission is reviewing this area as part of its Fifth Programme. Once the Commission has reported we will be considering the best way of taking forward the Government's commitment to abolishing the feudal system in the light of that report.

Skye Bridge

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the price paid by the Scottish Office to Mr. Tom Farmer in respect of Eileian Ban in connection with the construction of the Skye bridge. [1202]

Mr. Chisholm: It is normal practice for The Scottish Office to release the purchase price of land acquired for road construction schemes. In this case, however, at the vendor's request, it was agreed that the purchase price of Eilean Ban would not be divulged by the Scottish Office to a third party without the prior consent of the vendor.

Arable Area Payments

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the (a) maximum, (b) minimum and (c) average payment made under the arable area payments scheme in 1996–97. [1722]

Mr. Chisholm: Payments which have been made to farmers in Scotland under the 1996 arable area payments scheme area as follows:

(a) Maximum: £414,321[1]

(b) Minimum £71[1]

(c) Average £15,389[1]

[1]All figures are to the nearest pound.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Ministerial Offices

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on what sites other than Sanctuary Buildings the Department plans to build a designated Ministerial Office. [772]

Dr. Howells: The Department has no plans to build any further designated Ministerial Offices.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when work on building the Seventh Ministerial office in Sanctuary Buildings began; and when it was completed. [774]

Dr. Howells: During the Election period the Department took the opportunity to improve Ministerial accommodation in Sanctuary Buildings. Amongst the changes undertaken was the creation of a new Ministerial office to replace one of the existing six offices.

Work to create the seventh Minister's office began immediately following the Election on 2 May and was completed on 5 May.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the cost of building the seventh Ministerial office in Sanctuary Buildings. [773]

Dr. Howells: £11,086

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the cost of building a designated Ministerial office at the Department's Moorfoot site. [775]

Dr. Howells: £6,600.

School Budgets (Unitary Authorities)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the impact on school budgets of the creation of unitary authorities; what estimate he has made of the impact of the change on the number of teachers; and what steps he proposes to take to alleviate budget reductions arising out of the change to unitary status. [1043]

Mr. Byers: It is for unitary authorities, like other education authorities, to determine for themselves what the size of their schools budgets should be in the light of local priorities. We are presently reviewing the education element of the Standard Spending Assessment to ensure a fairer distribution of government grant. This may well benefit unitary authorities.

Business in the Community

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assistance he proposes to give to the Business in the Community initiative. [1040]

Mr. Byers: My right hon. Friend will consider what support he might give to Business in the Community on receipt of a developed proposal.

University Grants

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the current level of grant given by his Department to each of the universities. [1049]

Dr. Howells: Under the Funding and Higher Education Act 1992, the Department pays grant to the Higher Education Funding Council for England, which in turn distributes it to universities and colleges. The Act prohibits the Government from intervening in the allocation of grant to individual institutions.

The Funding Council announced the funding allocations for the academic year 1997–98 in February 1997. A copy of the Circular has been placed in the Library.

Graduates

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate his Department has made of the number of graduates who (a) find employment, (b) are unemployed, (c) have debt outstanding and (d) suffer bankruptcy within one year of graduating. [1047]

Dr. Howells: Of the 214,000 full-time degree graduates from HE institutions in the UK in the 1994–95 academic year, data on destinations six months after graduation are known for 178,000 of them. Of these, 106,000 entered employment and 15,000 were assumed unemployed. The remainder either entered further training, were not available for employment or training, or were overseas students returning overseas. The information requested on debt and bankruptcy is not held centrally.

Educational Opportunity

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the conclusions of the National Funding Council for Higher Education study on the chances of children from different social class backgrounds going on to study in university; and what steps he intends to take to improve the educational opportunities of disadvantaged children. [965]

Dr. Howells: The report by the Higher Education Funding Council for England on the influence of neighbourhood type on participation in higher education points out that the variation of participation in higher education by social group is closely related to educational achievement up to 18 years of age. The report, which has been submitted to the Dearing Inquiry into Higher Education, confirms the need for action to be taken to improve standards in schools. The Government has put the raising of standards for all pupils at the heart of its agenda for change. It has set clear targets for literacy and numeracy, namely that by the end of this Parliament every child should reach the appropriate National Curriculum levels for age 11. If these demanding targets are met, the educational opportunities for all children will be greatly improved, especially those from disadvantaged backgrounds who hitherto have often under-achieved. A copy of the report will be available shortly and will be placed in the Library.

Grammar Schools (Referendums)

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on (a) the range of persons who will be entitled to vote in referendums called in pursuit of the Government's policy for determining the future of existing grammar schools and (b) the procedures under which such referendums will be initiated. [977]

Mr. Byers: The Government has made clear that any changes in the admissions policies of grammar schools will be decided by local parents. Implementing that commitment will require legislation and details will be set out in due course.

Employment (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his Department's initiatives to increase the number of those from ethnic minority backgrounds in work. [1039]

Mr. Andrew Smith: At present we are developing plans to implement our manifesto commitment to reduce unemployment and welfare dependency, particularly amongst young people. I will ensure that people of ethnic minority origin benefit from this programme. I also intend to ensure that all the Department's policies, programmes and initiatives effectively meet the needs of those from ethnic minority backgrounds.

Higher Education Students (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of students in higher education are from ethnic minority backgrounds; and what initiatives he proposes to take to increase their number. [1041]

Dr. Howells: Ethnic minorities are well represented in higher education compared to their representation in the population as a whole. Nearly 12 per cent. of home students in the UK are from ethnic minority backgrounds, even though they form only 6 per cent. of the total GB population and 8 per cent. of the population aged 16 to 24 years.

Student Debt and Employment

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research relating to other countries regarding student debt and employment figures his Department has evaluated. [1048]

Dr. Howells: No information is held centrally on student debt in other countries. Available information for other countries on graduate employment is contained in OECD's "Education at a Glance: OECD Indicators" publication, a copy of which is in the Library.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will review the current arrangements in which persons in receipt of the jobseeker's allowance cannot reclaim travel expenses when signing on if their home is within a specified distance of the jobcentre. [1018]

Mr. Alan Howarth: We have no plans to do so. It is a very long-standing practice that jobseekers bear their own costs for their normal fortnightly attendance at the Jobcentre.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many places, at which schools and at what cost were provided under the assisted places scheme in the Bournemouth area of the Dorset local education authority in (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97. [1219]

Mr. Byers: there is one school participating in the assisted places scheme in the Bournemouth area, Talbot Heath School. In academic year 1995–96 there were 138 assisted pupils at the school and the total cost of the places was £525,000. In the current academic year 1996–97 there are 164 assisted pupils and the cost is estimated to be £630,000.

Training

Mr. Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the expenditure by the North London district of the Employment Service excluding administration costs, at cash and constant prices, in each year since 1987–88 on (a) Training for Work, and the programmes it replaced, (b) Youth Training and Modern Apprenticeships, and the earlier YTS, (c) the Enterprise Allowance Scheme, (d) Jobclubs, (e) Restart courses, Jobplan workshops and Workwise, and (f) Community Action; and if he will make a statement. [839]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 22 May 1997]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Bernie Grant, dated 2 June 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question regarding expenditure by the North London District of the Employment Service on a number of programmes since 1987. This is something that falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The table below outlines expenditure by the North London District of the Employment Service on Jobclubs, Restart, Jobplan, Workwise and Community Action since 1993. I will turn to the other programmes you mention later. I should explain that we have only provided information going back to 1993 because it is our policy to hold records of expenditure regionally for three years. However, I hope that you will find the information given below helpful. I ought to say that Workwise was not introduced until April 1995 and that the Community Action programme ran from November 1993 to June 1996.

Expenditure

Name of programme	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
Jobclub	1,197,413	1,276,546	1,304,239	688,463
Restart	312,179	233,850	178,438	166,616
Jobplan	751,440	627,135	410,119	415,907
Workwise	n/a	n/a	129,051	112,427
Community Action	125,375	541,500	508,473	48,760

I should explain that some of the programmes and employment initiatives you mention do not fall under the responsibility of the Employment Service. These are Training for Work (TfW), the Enterprise Allowance Scheme and Youth Training, Modern Apprenticeships, and the earlier YTS. This means that the North London District of the Employment Service did not incur any expenditure on these programmse and initiatives.

I hope this is helpful.

Funding (Grant-maintained Schools)

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his policy towards the funding of grant-maintained schools; and if he will make a statement about the level of funding to individual grant-maintained schools in (a) the current financial year, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000. [1283]

Mr. Byers: We are committed to establishing a funding system which does not discriminate unfairly between schools or pupils. For 1998–99 and beyond, we will consult widely about how best to achieve that. Funding for grant-maintained schools in 1997–98 is calculated under The Education (Grant-maintained and Grant-maintained Special Schools) (Finance) Regulations 1997.

Assisted Places

Dr. Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list those schools offering assisted places, indicating the number of places currently taken up in each, broken down by parliamentary constituency or in such other form as the information is available. [1428]

Mr. Byers: I refer the right hon. Member to the Answer I gave on 20 May to the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan), Official Report, 20 May 1997, column 32.

Education Spending (Devon)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will increase the resources available to Devon county council for education spending during the 1997–98 financial year. [1312]

Mr. Byers: We have no plans to amend the local government finance settlement for 1997–98. We will announce our intentions for 1998–99 in the autumn.

Special Measures Schools

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each local education authority how many school students are in schools in special measures; and what percentage of total school student numbers this represents. [1336]

Mr. Byers: The information requested is contained in a number of tables, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Konver Grant (Rochford and Southend East)

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which organisations, and for what purposes, received the £105,000 Konver grant provided to the Rochford and Southend East constituency, which the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Howarth) referred to in his oral statement on 22 May. [1691]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The recipient of the Konver grant will be Southend Enterprise Training Ltd. The purpose of the grant is to help prepare workers from the Atomic Weapons Establishment in Foulness, which closed in October 1996, for work outside the defence industry. I will write to the hon. Member providing more detailed information and place a copy of my reply in the Library.

Standard Spending Assessments

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to review the way the education element of standard spending assessments is calculated in the shire counties. [1535]

Mr. Byers: We are currently reviewing the education SSA methodology for 1998–99 in consultation with local authority representatives.

Welfare to Work

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many young people he estimates will benefit from his welfare to work proposals in the constituency of Wirral South; and on what time scale. [1563]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Currently there are just under 500 people between the ages of 18 and 24 who are claiming JSA in the Wirral South constituency, around half of whom have been out of work for more than 6 months. These young people, if they are still unemployed when our New Deal plans are implemented, will be offered opportunities to participate in a job, training or useful work experience.

The Government's commitment is to get 250,000 young people off benefits and into work. Work to take forward our Welfare to Work provisions started within days of the election, and they will be implemented as soon as possible.

Unemployment (Young People)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage reduction in youth unemployment he plans to achieve by the end of 1998. [1645]

Mr. Alan Howarth: It has not been the practice of Governments to forecast unemployment. This Government is committed to ensuring for young people unemployed for more than six months a job, training or useful work experience. This will bring new help and new hope to young adults in need of work, and we have made the development and implementation of these proposals one of our most urgent priorities.

Grant-Maintained Schools Foundation

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will make a statement on the arrangements made for redundancy payments to the staff of the Grant-Maintained Schools foundation; [568]

(2) when he expects the Grant-Maintained Schools Foundation to be closed; [569]

(3) what sum of money would be saved by his Department in the current financial year by closing the Grant-Maintained Schools Foundation at the end of May 1997. [570]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 20 May 1997]: Under the Government's proposed new framework of foundation, community and aided schools, grant-maintained status would no longer exist. There is thus no further need to allocate public funds to the Grant-Maintained Schools Foundation to provide information and advice to schools about GM status. The Foundation's chairman has been informed that grant will cease at the end of June. It is for the Foundation in the first instance to consider the consequences for its employees. Provision of £840,000 was made for the Foundation's grant in the Department's estimates for this financial year. £213,000 is being paid as grant up until the end of June.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Jammu and Kashmir

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Government of India to permit foreign journalists and representatives of human rights organisations unrestricted access to Jammu and Kashmir. [1024]

Mr. Fatchett: We attach great importance to respect for human rights throughout the world. We hope that the Indian Government will allow greater access to Jammu and Kashmir for human rights organisations. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary reiterated our concerns on Kashmir to the Indian Prime Minister's envoy last week. We are not aware of any restrictions on media access to Kashmir.

Congo

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent events in the Democratic Republic of Congo. [1035]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The end of the Mobutu regime and the advent of a new government in the former Zaire, now the Democratic Republic of the Congo, brings important new opportunities and possibilities for the people of that country and our relations with it. We welcome the fact that the changeover of power in the capital has been achieved without widespread violence.

We hope and expect that Laurent Kabila and his forces will ensure discipline and stability and promote reconciliation in the difficult days ahead. We have urged Mr. Kabila to ensure decent treatment for the refugees in his country and full access to them by humanitarian agencies now that the fighting is over. We are deeply concerned by the situation in the eastern part of the country and reports of the killing of refugees. We are addressing this serious problem bilaterally and with our partners in the EU and at the UN. We look forward to establishing a constructive relationship with the incoming administration.

We welcome Mr. Kabila's commitment to convene a constituent assembly and to hold elections and his stated commitment to human rights. We hope the transitional authority will be as broadly based as possible and that it will bring with it the much needed respect for human rights and the rule of law so long denied to the people of the country. The support of the international community will be essential if these hopes and plans are to be speedily realised. The British Government will play its full part, with its partners in the United Nations and the European Union, in helping to construct a better future for all the people.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government intends to recognise the Democratic Republic of Congo. [1029]

Mr. Lloyd: The Government's policy is to recognise States not governments. The Democratic Republic of the Congo is the new name of the State recognised by the United Kingdom and formerly known as Zaire. The Government has accepted the new name as the official name of the country. The change of name has no effect on UK recognition of the State itself.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when and where the next talks between his Department and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea are scheduled to take place. [1038]

Mr. Fatchett: We are aiming to hold a further round of talks at official level in London during the autumn.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what investigations are planned into possible holdings and assets of the former Mobutu regime in the United Kingdom and dependent territories; and if steps will be taken to return them to the people of Congo. [1028]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We will do all that we can to assist, but for obvious reasons I cannot comment in detail on the nature of any investigations.

Korea

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the discussions between his Department and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea in Pyongyang in March. [1034]

Mr. Fatchett: Officials visited Pyongyang from 18–22 March. The meeting was the most recent contact at official level with the North Koreans. The North Koreans were encouraged to resume a dialogue with South Korea; to participate in the Four Party Talks; and to continue a full implementation of the nuclear framework agreement with the United States.

Leghold Traps

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with (a) Canada, (b) the United States and (c) Russia on the need for an agreement to phase out leghold traps in order to avoid an EU import ban. [855]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Neither my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary or I have had the opportunity for discussions about leghold traps with my American, Canadian or Russian colleagues.

Land Mines

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to participate in an international ban on anti-personnel land mines. [1044]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We will work constructively in the Ottawa Process, which aims for agreement on an effective international ban on anti-personnel landmines by the end of this year. We shall also push in the Conference on Disarmament in Geneva for a wider ban.

Unemployment

Ms Kingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the Government have to co-operate with other European Union member states on EU initiatives to tackle long-term unemployment. [1082]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We believe that tackling unemployment must be one of the EU's top priorities. Within the Inter-governmental Conference we have signalled our support for a new Treaty Chapter on employment which would provide a basis for future co-operation between Member States in this area, including on initiatives to help the long-term unemployed.

Poland

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom relations with Poland. [1085]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Britain enjoys excellent relations with Poland. We have built up a strong partnership since 1989 which extends across a wide range of areas. The quality of bilateral relations is reflected in the number of high level visits which have taken place, in particular Her Majesty the Queen's highly successful State Visit to Poland in March 1996 and President Kwasniewski's Guest of Government visit to the UK last October. HMG continues to make good use of the opportunities generated by the State Visit to promote British interests and enhance our relations with Poland.

South Africa

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit the Republic of South Africa. [1455]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has no such plans at present, but he would hope to visit South Africa before long.

Kashmir

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he intends to take to secure the release of the British travellers held captive in Kashmir. [1454]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are deeply concerned about the welfare of Keith Mangan and Paul Wells. It is now 23 months since they were abducted. There have been no demands from the hostage takers and no proof of life since late 1995. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs met the British hostage families on 22 May. We are committed to finding out what has happened to Keith,

Paul and the other two hostages and will take every opportunity to raise the case with the Indian and Pakistani Governments.

Kenya

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he plans to make to the Government of Kenya regarding the human rights situation. [1478]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We will treat respect for human rights as an important element in determining our overall relationship with Kenya. We will take every suitable opportunity to remind the Government of Kenya of their obligations and to make clear our concerns on this subject, including in the run-up to legislative and presidential elections.

Departmental Computer Systems

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to ensure that his Department's computer systems are millennium compliant; and if he will make a statement. [1245]

Mr. Fatchett: In 1996 this Department established a millennium programme, beginning with a review of existing systems. It is now locating and fixing specific problems; and ensuring that all new or upgraded systems are millennium compliant. We estimate that all our key systems will be millennium compliant by 31 March 1999.

GCHQ

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will consider claims for compensation from former employees of the Government Communications Headquarters whose employment was terminated for refusing to give up their membership of independent trade unions; and if he will make a statement; [1269]

(2) what plans he has to grant compensation to former employees of the Government Communications Headquarters whose employment was terminated for refusing to give up their membership of independent trade unions. [1268]

Mr. Robin Cook: As part of this Government's commitment to open and fair relations in the workplace we have restored normal Trade Union rights to the staff of GCHQ. Those who left as a result of the 1984 decision accepted compensation where appropriate at the time.

British Council

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the level of his Department's grant to the British Council. [1462]

Mr. Fatchett: The level of FCO grant-in-aid to the British Council was published in the Departmental Report. For this year, the grant-in-aid is set at £97.7 million. This enables the Council to maintain a presence in 229 posts in 109 countries. The Council makes a major contribution to the achievement of many of the UK's foreign policy objectives, including the enhancement of the UK's influence and prestige overseas, the spread of good government and the promotion of exports.

Turkey

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he proposes to make to the Turkish Government in respect of their refusal to arrest and extradite Asil Nadir. [1453]

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he made to the Government of Turkey to secure the return to the United Kingdom of Asil Nadir. [1637]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We remain in close touch with the Turkish authorities about Nadir. A warrant for his arrest has been issued and the Turkish authorities have been requested to effect an arrest. We await a response from the competent Ministerial authority.

Venezuela

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what guidelines his Department issues for United Kingdom passport holders travelling to Venezuela for the purpose of (a) tourism, (b) business and (c) transit. [1487]

Mr. Fatchett: The current advice issued to all United Kingdom passport holders travelling to Venezuela which is available on the INTERNET and CEEFAX states:

"Difficult economic conditions have caused a surge in crime in all areas of Venezuela, particularly in Caracas and Maracaibo, some targeted against foreigners. There have also been incidents involving tourists in Margarita. Street robberies and car-jackings can occur anywhere. Do not carry large amounts of money or valuable jewellery and dress down. Care should be taken at all times and walking in city streets should be avoided at night. Use taxis wherever possible. Colombian terrorists and narcotic gangs are active in regions bordering Colombia where there has been a recent increase in kidnappings. Do not travel in the border area except in well escorted groups. Visitors are advised to register at the British Embassy in Caracas telephone 993 4111."

Visas

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the waiting times for (a) visas and (b) interviews relating to visa applications in respect of United Kingdom posts at (i) Bombay, (ii) Islamabad, (iii) New Delhi, (iv) Calcutta, (v) Karachi, (vi) Dacca, (vii) Washington, (viii) New York, (ix) Dar-Es-Salam, (x) Nairobi and (xi) Lagos. [1477]

Mr. Fatchett: In view of the amount of detail needed to answer this question, my noble friend the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Gibraltar

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to expand the use of Gibraltar airport. [1499]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The development of the airport should contribute significantly to the development of Gibraltar's economy. We are ready to consider any practicable proposal which is acceptable to all parties.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 19 May, Official Report, column 14, if Her Majesty's Government and the Spanish Government agree upon the existence and extent of the territorial sea adjacent to the coast of Gibraltar under British sovereignty. [1500]

Mr. Henderson: We are clear that the territorial sea adjacent to the coast of Gibraltar is under British sovereignty. The Government of Spain disagrees.

Amsterdam Treaty

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department will, in co-operation with other departments, provide a cost assessment for implementing articles 118 and 119 of the draft Amsterdam treaty. [1719]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Article 118 and 119 of the draft IGC treaty would not have any direct cost implications in themselves. It is clearly not possible to assess now the cost of legislation which may be brought forward under these articles in the future. But the Government will assess carefully all future proposals for legislation, taking fully into account their likely cost both to industry and to the taxpayer.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the relationship is between article B of the draft Amsterdam treaty and the Schengen Protocol in the same draft. [1734]

Mr. Henderson: Currently the relationship between draft Article B and the draft Schengen Protocol is unclear. The matter remains under discussion at the Inter-Governmental Conference.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what would be the effect of the application of article Fa in the draft Amsterdam treaty to a state refusing to comply with treaty law. [1726]

Mr. Henderson: Draft Article Fa would provide a mechanism for determining whether sanctions could be imposed on a member State. It would be for the Council to determine whether a refusal to comply with Treaty law merited sanctions and if so what sanctions would be appropriate. The draft article is still under discussion at the Intergovernmental Conference.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, under article F in the draft Amsterdam treaty, the European Union could undertake further acts of European integration without the need for further treaties. [1724]

Mr. Henderson: The Presidency's draft revised article F would emphasise the principle that the European Union is founded on, and should respect, fundamental rights. The revised article F, like the current text of the article, confers no power to adopt legislation or other measures. It could therefore not be a basis for "further acts of European Integration".

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on article 113(5) of the draft Amsterdam treaty. [1714]

Mr. Henderson: The Government do not support the proposed amendments to article 113 as currently drafted. We shall be participating fully in discussions in the Intergovernmental Conference and seeking amendments which meet our concerns.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the areas of policy-making which the draft Amsterdam treaty would change from being subject to unanimity to being subject to a qualified majority vote in the Council of Ministers. [1738]

Mr. Henderson: The document, circulated by the Dutch Presidency on 16 May, makes no recommendations on which areas of policy making might move from unanimity to qualified majority vote. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department will, in co-operation with other departments, provide a cost assessment for the United Kingdom of applying the common concern principle in the Title on Employment as set out in the draft Amsterdam treaty; and what assessment he has made of the effect on inward investment to the United Kingdom of applying that principle. [1720]

Mr. Henderson: Negotiations on the draft Employment Title are continuing. The Government's assessment is that including in the title the idea that Member States shall regard their employment policies as a matter of "common concern" would not have significant cost implications nor any impact on inward investment in the UK.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Amsterdam treaty proposals concerning European Union peacemaking. [1713]

Mr. Henderson: We support proposals for the incorporation into the treaty on European Union of "humanitarian and rescue tasks, peacekeeping tasks and tasks of combat forces in crisis management, including peacemaking" as issues covered by the Union's Common Foreign and Security Policy. These tasks would continue to be carried out by the Western European Union, which formulated and agreed them in 1992 as part of that organisations' implementation of its role agreed at Maastricht in 1991.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, according to the draft Amsterdam treaty, British diplomats will act under British or European Union instructions in the event of a conflict of interests under article J. [1735]

Mr. Henderson: British diplomats will continue to represent British interests at all times and will act under instructions from the British Government.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what would be the effect of the application of article Fa in the draft Amsterdam treaty to a state declining to apply a ruling by the European Court of Human Rights. [1733]

Mr. Henderson: Draft Article Fa would provide a mechanism for determining whether sanctions could be imposed on a Member State. It would be for the Council to determine whether a refusal to apply a ruling by the European Court of Human Rights merited sanctions and if so, what sanctions would be appropriate. The draft article is still under discussion at the Intergovernmental Conference.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on article J.13 of the draft Amsterdam treaty and the circumstances in which a member state could be overruled when a common foreign policy position is being sought. [1715]

Mr. Henderson: Article J.13 of the draft Treaty is the subject of current negotiation in the Intergovernmental Conference. The Government does not foresee circumstances in which a Member State could be overruled against its wishes.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs by what means his Department makes available its publications in (a) Braille, (b) audio tape and (c) large print; and how this is publicised. [1686]

Mr. Fatchett: This Department's leaflet on British Consular Services Abroad is available in large print. We also provide an automated telephone answering service providing recorded travel advice on destinations which give rise to the most enquiries. Advice on other destinations is available from the Travel Advice Unit whose members can read out the advice or provide hard copies in large print. We are currently discussing with the RNIB how we can best publicise these services through RNIB publications. Other publications aimed at an overseas audience are not available in Braille, audio tape or large print.

Departmental Advisers

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the names of the political and special advisers appointed to his Department since the general election. [1625]

Mr. Robin Cook: Special Advisers who have been appointed are Andrew Hood and David Clark.

Zaire

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what diplomatic contacts have been made with the new regime in Zaire; and if he will make a statement. [1747]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Her Majesty's Ambassador in Kinshasa met Mr. Kabila on 24 May. He was one of the first Ambassadors to do so. The Embassy in Kinshasa is in contact with other members of the Alliance in line with normal diplomatic relations with an incoming administration. I also refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave today to the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz).

Immigration Staff

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many officials are employed in the Migration and Visa Correspondence Unit; what is the average time it takes to deal with an hon. Member's inquiry; and how many outstanding cases there were on 5 May. [1823]

Mr. Fatchett: There are 12 officials working in the Correspondence Unit. The Unit's target for replying to letters from hon. Members is 15 working days. There were 195 letters awaiting reply on 11 May; the figure for 5 May is not available.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many staff deal with immigration-related issues in the posts at (a) Bombay, (b) New Delhi, (c) Calcutta, (d) Islamabad, (e) Karachi and (f) Dacca. [1824]

Mr. Fatchett: Excluding the head of post or mission, the number of staff dealing with entry clearance issues (though not all are full time) in the Posts referred to are as follows:

	Number
(a) Bombay	41
(b) New Delhi	49
(c) Calcutta	4
(d) Islamabad	95
(e) Karachi	21
(f) Dacca	55

Japan

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has for compensation for former prisoners of war in Japanese prison camps. [1515]

Mr. Fatchett: We recognise the great sacrifices made by those who suffered in Japanese prison camps in the Second World War, and share the widespread public sympathy and concern for them. We accept that the question of compensation was legally settled in the 1951 San Francisco Peace Treaty. Strong feelings, however, continue in this country and we are in close contact with the Japanese Government about these concerns.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to adopt a social model of disability in framing all future and amending previous relevant legislation and guidance; and if he will make a statement. [1687]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: This Department has a Programme for Action to achieve equality of opportunity for disabled staff. We seek to ensure that our policies take full account of human rights, including those of disabled people.

TREASURY

Bank of England

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has for the tenure of (a) the Governor, (b) Deputy Governor and (c) Members of the Court of the Bank of England; and how he plans to meet the requirements of the Maastricht treaty in this area. [287]

Mr. Gordon Brown: The Government propose that the Governor and the two Deputy Governors will be appointed for five year terms. The non-Executive Members of the Court will be appointed for three year terms. The Government's decision to give the Bank operational responsibility for setting interest rates is a British solution, designed to meet British domestic needs for stability. Decisions on EMU will be taken if and when required, and will have to be agreed by Cabinet, Parliament and the people.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the measures he has proposed for the independence of the Bank of England meet all the requirements for bank independence in the Maastricht treaty. [299]

Mr. Brown: No. The measures proposed are different in a number of key respects. Further legislation on the Bank would be required if the UK wanted to join EMU.

Landfill Tax

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list the environmental bodies which enrolled with ENTRUST under the landfill tax credits scheme; [609]

(2) if he will list the projects which have been endorsed by ENTRUST for funding with the money so far disbursed, indicating their projected budget, and their location. [610]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 21 May 1997]: A list of the environmental bodies enrolled under the landfill tax credits scheme, the projects which have been endorsed for funding with the money so far disbursed and their location has been placed in the Library. The information on the projected budget for each project is currently unavailable but I will ensure that it is placed in the Library as soon as it becomes so.

Mrs. Jackson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money has been paid to ENTRUST by waste companies under the landfill tax credits scheme. [616]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 21 May 1997]: ENTRUST has been notified by the environmental bodies of receipts of contributions under the scheme totalling some £1.5 million to date.

Mrs. Jackson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money ENTRUST has received from its one per cent levy on money paid to environmental bodies under the landfill tax credit scheme. [617]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 21 May 1997]: ENTRUST has invoiced the environmental bodies that have informed it of receipts of contributions under the scheme. So far it has received £5,795.26.

Single Currency

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of United Kingdom companies, by industry sector, currently preparing for the introduction of the single currency. [1016]

Mrs. Liddell: The wholesale financial sector will be immediately affected by introduction of the single currency, whether or not the United Kingdom participates. Preparations in this sector are now advanced. The need for preparations by other businesses depends on whether the United Kingdom adopts the single currency, and the sector in which they operate, given that the introduction of banknotes and coins will take place about three years after participating countries adopt the euro. My impression is that the preparedness of companies varies, though I have no estimate of the number of firms by industrial sector which are making preparations.

Road Fuel Duty

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his Department's policy in respect of the annual rate of increase of road fuel duty. [1001]

Dawn Primarolo: This government recognises the importance of the rate of road fuel duty in meeting our commitments to reducing emissions of CO_2. Together with colleagues I shall be considering how best to make a contribution towards this commitment.

Furs Ban

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans HM Customs and Excise have to enforce the ban on furs caught by leghold traps if and when it comes into force. [852]

Dawn Primarolo: In the event of the introduction of an EU wide ban of furs from animals caught by leghold traps, fur imports from third countries will be subjected to regulatory checks by Customs making full use of their electronic entry processing system and to appropriate anti-smuggling activities. Customs' legal powers of confiscation would apply to any furs imported in breach of such a ban just as they do to any other prohibited goods.

Interest and Exchange Rates

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the increase or decrease in (a) the real and (b) the nominal rate of interest in May 1997 over that in the last quarter of (i) 1973, (ii) 1976, (iii) 1985, (iv) 1991, (v) 1992 and (vi) 1995; [961]

(2) what was the increase or decrease in (a) the real and (b) the nominal exchange rate against (1) the deutschmark and (2) the United States dollar in May 1997 over the last quarter of (i) 1973, (ii) 1976, (iii) 1985, (iv) 1991, (v) 1992 and (iv) 1995. [962]

Mrs. Liddell: The interest rate data can be derived from Table 7.10 and Table 7.2A of Financial Statistics, published by the ONS.

The nominal exchange rate data can be derived from Table 29 of Main Economic Indicators, published by the OECD. The real exchange rates can then be calculated using the consumer prices indices in Table 18.

Married Couples (Taxation)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer over what time scale he has instructed the Inland Revenue to complete the report into the taxation of married couples announced by the former Financial Secretary on 17 March; and if he will publish it. [1223]

Mr. Gordon Brown: The Government have asked Martin Taylor to conduct a review of the tax and benefits systems. This will concentrate on streamlining and modernising the tax and benefits systems so as to promote work incentives, reduce poverty and welfare dependency, and strengthen community and family life.

Building Societies (Share Certificates)

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the legal responsibilities of building societies which convert to banks in respect of informing investors that they are entitled to receive the share certificate for their windfall shares. [1221]

Mrs. Liddell: Once a building society has converted to a bank, the new company is obliged to issue certificates to its shareholders, unless the shares are dematerialised. Where this is so, the Uncertificated Securities Regulations 1995 requires that new shares are issued in uncertificated form only to those who are system members of CREST. As this requires positive action, the default position is that newly converted societies are obliged to issue shareholders with certificates, unless they have elected to become members of CREST, and receive uncertificated shares. So the question of an obligation to inform shareholders that they are entitled to a certificate does not arise.

In addition, shareholders are free to elect a nominee to hold shares on their behalf. Those who do so would also not receive a certificate, even if the shares have not been dematerialised, because they are registered in the name of the nominee, not the shareholder.

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received in respect of the issue of share certificates by the Halifax building society as a result of its flotation on the stock exchange; and if he will make a statement. [1222]

Mrs. Liddell: None.

Business VAT Returns

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many random checks on business value added tax returns were carried out in each of the last three years for which figures are available, by region and ethnicity of the business owner. [1110]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs does not hold the statistics requested.

Private Health Insurance (Tax Relief)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the annual financial saving to the Exchequer from abolishing tax relief on private patient insurance schemes for the elderly. [1099]

Dawn Primarolo: The total tax relief on private medical insurance contracts for individuals aged 60 or over is estimated to be about £120 million in 1997–98.

Banking Supervision

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will include in his proposals for banking supervision arrangements for auditors of all banks regulated under the Banking Act 1987 to be appointed by the regulatory body. [1537]

Mrs. Liddell: We have no plans to include such arrangements.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what means his Department makes available its publications in (a) Braille, (b) audio tape and (c) large print; and how this is publicised. [1688]

Mrs. Liddell: If requested Treasury publications would be made available in braille using braille transcripton services. However to date this has not been requested.

Similarly, if requested, the Treasury could make arrangements to have publications produced on audio tape.

However as these services cannot be provided in-house, they are not publicised as Treasury services.

In addition, all public Treasury documents are produced in the optimum typeface sizes (at least 12 point). These are also available on the Internet, where they can be heard by visually handicapped people who have access to a "talking computer" or can be printed out as text of any size.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to graduate the rate of vehicle excise duty by the fuel efficiency of the vehicle. [1002]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government are keeping all options for vehicle excise duty under review.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of those eligible to vote he estimates were not registered to vote at the time of (a) the 1987 General Election, (b) the 1992 General Election and (c) the 1997 General Election. [1493]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Keith Vaz, dated 2 June 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) to your recent question asking how many of those eligible to vote he estimates were not registered to vote at the time of (a) the 1987 General Election, (b) the 1992 General Election and (c) the 1997 General Election.

There is not enough information to give a reliable figure for those missing from the Electoral Register. It is not possible to compare registration figures with estimates of the resident population directly because these two sources are not compiled on the same basis. The differences between the coverage of the Electoral Registers and the mid year population estimates have been published in Appendix B to the ONS publication '1996 Electoral Statistics' series EL no. 23, a copy of which is attached.

An approximate figure has been calculated for the UK resident population who were eligible to vote in 1987 and 1992 and, relative to the number of electors registered in 1987 and 1992, this suggests that 2.6% and 4.5% of those eligible to vote were not registered in these two years respectively.

An estimate cannot be made for those registered at the time of the 1997 General Election because mid year estimates for the resident population at the preceding mid year are not yet available. This will be possible to do when the ONS publish the 1996 mid year population estimates which is planned for August 1997.

The table below shows the numbers of parliamentary electors in Great Britain between 1976 and 1996 collated by ONS and the General Register Office for Scotland from returns made by local Electoral Registration Officers. These are compared with roughly corresponding estimates of the resident population.

	Parliamentary electors	Approximate corresponding resident population at preceding mid-year[1]	(a) as percentage of (b)
1976	39,739	40,870	97.2
1981	41,069	42,108	97.5
1982	41,405	42,369	97.7
1983	41,642	42,584	97.8
1984	41,906	42,859	97.8
1985	42,048	43,167	97.4
1986	42,305	43,470	97.3
1987	42,563	43,722	97.4
1988	42,596	43,965	96.9
1989	42,492	44,164	96.2
1990	42,533	44,360	95.9
1991	42,424	44,502	95.3
1992	42,583	44,628	95.4
1993	42,565	44,713	95.2
1994	42,624	44,781	95.2
1995	42,727	44,861	95.2
1996	42,808	45,012	95.1

[1] Persons aged 17 and over, together with 63 per cent of those aged 16, who became 18 during the period when each register was in use. No account has been taken of adults who died between the mid-year reference date for population estimates and the 10 October qualifying date for the following year's electoral register.

The ratios in the final column suggest that coverage of the electoral register has been steady in recent years, after a decline in the period between 1986 and 1991. However, these ratios need to be treated with care and do not represent the proportion of eligible persons who were on the register at their qualifying address for a number of reasons:

- the electoral register (the numerator) contains some redundant entries for people who had already moved elsewhere or died at the time when it was compiled but whose names were nonetheless carried forward to a new register;
- the electoral register contains some legitimate dual registrations, for example by students and owners of second homes;
- the electoral register, but not the population estimates (the denominator) includes overseas voters and service voters who are living abroad; the population estimates include residents who were ineligible to be on the electoral register because they were neither British Commonwealth nor Republic of Ireland citizens.

The effects of these various factors, which operate upon the ratios in both directions, are not known precisely.

A small sample survey (Electoral registration in 1991—S. Smith, ONS (1993)) carried out by ONS following the 1991 Census of Population gave a central estimate of 92.9 per cent. (standard error 0.36 per cent.) for the proportion of eligible residents in Great Britain who were registered as electors at their usual addresses. This figure needs qualification, too. It relates to people who lived in private households, and it does not cover people who were not enumerated in the Census. On the implausibly extreme assumption that all people missed by the Census were also missing from the electoral register where they lived the proportion of eligible people covered by the latter could have been as low as 91.0 per cent.

Those living in London, attainers and young adults, people who had changed their residence within the last year, New Commonwealth citizens in the non-white ethnic groups, and those living in rented accommodation were all found more likely than other people to be missing from the electoral registers.

Overseas Electors

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list, by parliamentary constituency, the total number of overseas electors registered in each constituency in the United Kingdom. [844]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Michael Colvin, dated 2 June 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) to your recent question about overseas electors registered in each constituency in the United Kingdom.

ONS have published, by parliamentary constituency, the number of overseas electors on the 1997 Electoral Registers for the United Kingdom. This information was published on 26 March 1997 in ONS Monitor EL97/1, and is available in the Library.

Interest Rates (Bank of England)

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the role of the Bank of England's agents in the setting of interest rates. [1122]

Mrs. Liddell: Interest rate decisions will be made by a Monetary Policy Committee, on the basis of a majority vote. The MPC will require regional and sectoral information for the purposes of monetary policy formation, including reports from the Bank's agents. The non-Executive Members of the Court will review the performance of the MPC, with particular regard to whether the Bank is collecting proper regional and sectoral information.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Roy Beggs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to review the methods by which the numbers unemployed in the United Kingdom are quantified. [1431]

Mrs. Liddell: The Director of the Office for National Statistics is responsible for deciding the form, coverage and timing of release of statistics issued by his Office, taking into account the views of customers. ONS is presently consulting customers on the future presentation of labour market statistics; the consultation exercises was launched through an article in the Labour Market Trends published on 8 May. Comments on the proposals should be sent to ONS by 14 June.

The proposals set out for consultation reflect the House of Commons Employment Select Committee recommendation that more prominence should be given to the measure of unemployment which is based on the internationally agreed ILO definition.

Bereavement Allowance

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to extend eligibility for the widows bereavement allowance to widowers. [593]

Dawn Primarolo: There are no plans to extend the widows bereavement allowance to widowers.

Budget Statement

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to make his Budget Statement. [1909]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I am pleased to announce that the Budget Statement, promised in the manifesto, will be on Wednesday 2 July.

Inland Revenue (Salisbury Office)

Mr. Key: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the future of the Salisbury local office of the Inland Revenue. [74]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 19 May 1997]: Salisbury Tax Office is not currently proposed for a closure under the Inland Revenue's long-term programme of office restructuring.

Unemployment (Humberside)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list by each year of age, the number of (a) male and (b) female 18 to 25-year-olds currently unemployed in Hull. [145]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 19 May 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 2 June 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) to your recent question (145) on the number of (a) male and (b) female 18 to 25 year olds currently unemployed in Hull travel-to-work area (TTWA) by each year of age.

ONS produce two measures of unemployment. The first, derived from the quarterly Labour Force Survey (LFS), is defined on a consistent and internationally recognised basis set out by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and counts as unemployed people who are: a) without a paid job; b) available to start work within the next two weeks and c) have either looked for work in the last four weeks or are waiting to start a job already obtained.

ONS also publishes the monthly claimant count, which is based on the administrative system and includes all people claiming unemployment-related benefits (i.e. Jobseekers Allowance, Income Support or National Insurance credits) at Employment Service offices on the day of the monthly count, who on that day had signed on as unemployed and available to do any suitable work. Essentially, all people who attend an Employment Service office to sign are counted, irrespective of whether they are actually receiving benefit.

The information you have requested for Hull is only available from the claimant count and is shown in the attached table.

Unadjusted claimant unemployment in Hull TTWA in April 1997

Age band	Male	Female
18	396	251
19	466	236
20–24[1]	2,362	771

[1] It is not possible to separate individual years from the total, the nearest claimant count approximation relates to the number of unemployed 20–24 year olds.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many (a) males and (b) females aged 18 to 25 years are currently unemployed in Kingston upon Hull, North; what percentage of the national total for this age bracket this figure represents; and if he will break down these figures into totals for males and females; [144]

(2) how many (a) males and (b) females in Hull aged 18 to 25 years are currently unemployed; and what percentage of the national total for this age bracket these figures represent. [143]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 19 May 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

(2) how many (a) males and (b) females have been unemployed in (a) Hull and (b) Kingston upon Hull, North for more than (i) six months, (ii) 12 months, (iii) 18 months and (iv) 24 months. [147]

Fuel (Value Added Tax)

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the gain per annum to the average family if VAT on fuel were reduced from 8 per cent. to 5 per cent. and the net gains to pensioners if the VAT fuel subsidy was withdrawn accordingly. [619]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 May 1997]: The estimated full year gain in 1997–98 for the average household; if VAT on domestic fuel and power was reduced from 8 per cent. to 5 per cent., is about £18 per annum. Amongst households with a pensioner head, the average gain is slightly under £16 per annum. The VAT fuel subsidy was designed to compensate pensioners and other vulnerable groups with average spending on fuel and power. If the subsidy were reduced to directly reflect the reduced expenditure on fuel and power there would, on average, be no net gain or loss.

Correspondence

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his letter of 15 May, for how many days before any Budget it will be inappropriate for Treasury Ministers to comment on written representations from hon. Members and given hon. Members a personal reply. [1057]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 May 1997]: From the time that Treasury Ministers write to let hon. Members know, which will normally be two to three months before a Budget.

Windfall Levy

Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much the proposed windfall tax on the privatisation utilities is likely to generate (a) in the first 12 months of its operation and (b) over the next five years. [213]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 22 May 1997]: The Chancellor of the Exchequer will announce details of the windfall levy in his Budget Statement.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the companies which will be subject to a windfall levy; and if he will make a statement. [763]

Mr. Robinson [holding answer 21 May 1997]: The Chancellor of the Exchequer will announce details of the windfall levy in his Budget Statement.

Nolan Committee

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if his proposed appointments to the Bank of England monetary policy committee will be subject to procedures recommended by the Nolan committee. [179]

Mrs Liddell [holding answer 21 May 1997]: The committee will include the Governor and two Deputy Governors appointed by the Government, and two members appointed by the Governor. It will also include four other members appointed from outside the Bank by the Government. They will be recognised experts. They will be allowed to engage, with the Government's approval, in other activities which do not give rise to a conflict of interest.

PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Alastair Campbell and Mr. Jonathan Powell

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the terms and conditions under which Mr. Alastair Campbell and Mr. Jonathan Powell are employed as civil servants at No. 10 Downing Street. [758]

The Prime Minister: Alastair Campbell is employed as my Press Secretary and Jonathan Powell as my Chief of Staff. There are precedents of such appointments under previous Conservative administrations. Both are employed as Special Advisers, under terms and conditions based on the model contract for Special Advisers, which I have placed in the Library today. The salary arrangements and paybills for Special Adviser appointments and other relevant information will be announced in due course. Special Advisers are normally restricted to an advisory role. As previously announced, an amendment has been made to the Civil Service Order in Council, providing for an exception to this rule for a maximum of three appointments in my office.

Political Appointments

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister how many political appointments have been offered and accepted in No. 10 Downing Street, in the Cabinet Office and in any other department and agency; and if he will list the comparable numbers before the change of Government. [1704]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Chichester (Mr. Tyrie) today. There were 38 such paid appointees in post as at 27 February 1997.

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the political advisers and other political appointees to the civil service made since 1 May; if each appointment has been approved by him; what is the total annual salary bill of such political advisers and other political appointees; and what was the equivalent bill in 1997 prices of the equivalent appointments made in the two weeks following 3 May 1979. [753]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 May 1997]: In relation to my office, I refer the hon. Member to the list of appointments I have given today to the hon. Member for Worthing, West (Mr. Bottomley).

For other Cabinet Ministers, I have approved, subject to agreement on their salaries, the following Special Advisers who will be paid from public funds:

In addition, Michael Barber has been appointed as the Standards and Effectiveness Adviser to the Department of Education and Employment. I will provide the information on the total salary bill when agreement has been reached with each individual on their precise employment terms.

In the two weeks following 3 May 1979, five Special Adviser appointments were made, at a total salary bill in 1997 prices of £163,000.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Prime Minister how many political appointments to his Private Office, Press Office and elsewhere in Downing Street have been made since 30 April; and how many such appointees were in place on 30 April 1996. [1575]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the list of appointments in the reply that I have given today to the hon. Member for Worthing, West (Mr. Bottomley).

Eight such appointees were in place on 30 April 1996.

Mr. Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the name, function and salary of each political appointee in No. 10 Downing Street and associated offices, stating by whom the salary is paid, or whether the appointment is unpaid. [1705]

The Prime Minister: As we made clear during the election campaign, I believe it is important to bolster the centre of Government and bring in fresh ideas, while at the same time maintaining and supporting a politically neutral civil service.

I have approved the following Special Adviser appointments in No. 10 Downing Street:

UN General Assembly

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Prime Minister which Ministers will represent the United Kingdom Government at the United Nations General Assembly special session in New York on 23–27 June. [106]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 21 May 1997]: I shall be attending the Special Session and will be addressing the General Assembly on 23 June. My right hon. Friends, the Deputy Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for International Development and my hon. Friend, the Minister for the Environment will also attend.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary, is playing an active role in preparations for the Special Session, but it is not clear at this stage whether he will be able to attend.

Freedom of Information Bill

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what factors underlay his decision not to introduce a Freedom of Information Bill in the present session. [574]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 21 May 1997]: It is important to have full public consultation on the content of this Bill. To this end, we will shortly be setting out the Government's proposals for a Freedom of Information Bill in a White Paper. We then hope to publish a draft bill, for consultation, early in the new year.

Lobbyists

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will ensure that details of all contacts, formal and informal, between Government Ministers and lobbyists are recorded and made available for parliamentary scrutiny. [95]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 May 1997]: Ministers will in the normal course of business receive deputations from many groups who are concerned to press their own interests or those of their clients. Departments will have a record of all Ministerial meetings, but I do not consider that it would be practicable either to publish all such records or to distinguish particular groups as lobbyists.

Removal Costs

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Prime Minister if public funds were used to pay for the cost of his and his family's move to Downing street. [308]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 May 1997]: There were no additional costs to public funds from my and my family's move to Downing Street.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

BSE

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has evaluated on the incidence of BSE-related conditions in animals other than cattle. [9]

Mr. Rooker: The following table gives the number of confirmed Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathy (TSE) cases in animals other than cattle in Great Britain as at 30 April 1997.

Species	Number of cases
Ankole cow	2
Bison	1
Cheetah[1]	3
Domestic cat	77
Eland	6
Gemsbok	1
Kudu	6
Nyala	1
Ocelot	2
Oryx (Arabian)	1
Oryx (scimitar horned)	1
Puma	3
Tiger[2]	1

[1] Plus two litter mates that died in zoos abroad.
[2] Plus another positive but clinically normal.

Until November 1994, with the exception of BSE and scrapie, none of the other TSEs were notifiable. On the other hand, the Government believe that most cases of TSE have been reported to Agriculture Departments and epidemiological investigations have been carried out where possible. With respect to exotic ruminants, risk of infection was primarily associated with consumption of feed, often produced for cattle, which contained meat and bone meal (MBM). With respect to exotic felines and domestic cats, the risk was considered to be associated with consumption of central nervous system tissue which could legally be fed to them until it was banned in September 1990.

No cases of TSE have been found confirmed in canines, although a case of spongiform encephalopathy in a Norwegian dog showing a spongiform change in the brain is under investigation. This is not yet confirmed and speculation about its origin delayed until results are available.

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement on (a) the disposal of carcases of cattle with BSE in landfill sites between 1988 and 1991 and (b) the progress of the Ministry's risk assessment of a set of the landfill sites used for the burials; [967]

(2) if a risk assessment, with special reference to the effect on the water table, is being undertaken regarding the disposal of carcases with BSE at the Darrington Leys quarry. [970]

Mr. Rooker: In the early years of the BSE epidemic, incineration capacity was insufficient to deal with all the cattle involved. Therefore, during the summer of 1988 this department approached North Yorkshire County Council seeking licensed landfill facilities for disposal of BSE suspect cattle. At that time, the County Council was responsible as a waste disposal authority for the granting and supervision of licences under Part I of the Control of Pollution Act 1974. Following an assessment by the authority of the landfill sites then in its ownership, Darrington Leys Quarry was identified by the authority as suitable for the disposal of waste of this kind. The Ministry's records, cross checked with those available to the Environment Agency, indicate that the carcases of fewer than 40 cattle affected, or suspected of being affected, with BSE were disposed of at the Darrington Leys Quarry landfill site between August 1988 and July 1990.

In May last year a sub-group of the independent Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee (SEAC), which advises Ministers on BSE, considered the issue of BSE and the environment, including the past disposal of BSE suspect cattle to landfill. It considered that although the spongiform encephalopathy agent was not yet fully characterised, there was good evidence to believe that individual molecules were not infectious and that infectivity was associated with macro molecular agglomerations indeed possibly with tissue fragments, albeit small ones. On this basis they concluded it was unlikely that leachate from landfill sites would present a significant risk and there was certainly no justification for taking heroic measures to excavate sites, even those which had previously been used for material such as BSE-confirmed cattle.

The Environment Agency has regulatory responsibility for supervising the safe operation of landfill sites and is in possession of SEAC's advice. The Agency monitors ground water quality in the vicinity of licensed landfill sites as a check for any leachate contamination. The Agency, not this department, is assessing data in respect of all the sites concerned and, in quantitative terms, on a typical selection of identified sites to determine whether there is a possibility of impact on water quality. The Agency is progressing this as quickly as possible and are seeking the views of SEAC on the approach taken.

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many of the cattle buried at Darrington Leys quarry near Cridling Stubbs were subsequently proved to be carrying the BSE virus following tests by his Department. [968]

Mr. Rooker: Compulsory slaughter of all suspects, with compensation, was introduced from August 1988. Under these arrangements the heads of suspects were removed from the carcases for confirmation of the presence, or otherwise, of BSE and were subsequently incinerated. No BSE suspects have been disposed of by landfilling since 1991, when sufficient carcase incineration capacity came on stream to process the number of cases that were coming forward.

The carcases of fewer than 40 cattle affected, or suspected of being affected, with BSE were disposed of at the Darrington Leys quarry. To establish from records how many of those cattle had BSE would involve disproportionate costs. However, we know from total national figures for BSE suspects that approximately 75 per cent. of cases examined subsequently prove positive. Applying this rate to the cases landfilled at Darrington Leys quarry would suggest that fewer than 30 of the cattle would have been confirmed cases.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 21 May, Official Report, column 98, on the incidence of BSE in the next 10 years, if he will list the assumptions that have been made in anticipating that the BSE epidemic will be close to extinction by 2001. [1512]

Mr. Rooker: The assumptions that were made in predicting future trends in the incidence of BSE are set out in the paper written by Professor R. M. Anderson et al, to which I referred in my answer of 21 May. A copy of Professor Anderson's paper can be found at Appendix 5 of the November 1996 Progress Report which has been placed in the Library of the House. A correction to that paper was published in Nature on 20 March 1997.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 21 May, Official Report, column 98, on the projected cost of the cattle cull, what factors underlie the difference between the figures in his answer and earlier estimates of the total cost given by his Department. [1513]

Mr. Rooker: The estimated cost of the selective cull quoted in my reply of 21 May assumes 100,000 animals are slaughtered. It encompasses compensation, disposal and operating costs, but does not take account of EC receipts and consequential savings to the OTMS.

It is not apparent to which earlier estimates my hon. Friend is referring. We are, of course, refining our estimates as the cull proceeds and more information on the actual costs is obtained.

If my hon. Friend wishes to write to me on any specific points I should be happy to respond to them.

Beef

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what financial assistance he plans to provide to beef farmers in Shropshire during the period that the European beef ban remains in force. [1064]

Mr. Rooker: Shropshire beef farmers continue to benefit from the considerable volume of public expenditure which is being used to underpin the beef market, through the Over Thirty Month and Calf Processing Aid Schemes, and the extended intervention arrangements. In addition, they continue to be able to claim for Beef Special Premium, Suckler Cow Premium and Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances, through which they received over £13 million in 1996–97.

Departmental Computer Systems

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to ensure that his Department's computer systems will be millennium compliant; and if he will make a statement. [1246]

Mr. Morley: A programme of millennium preparations consisting of a series of parallel projects covering different aspects of the Department's computer systems and the associated technical infrastructure has been established under the general direction of the Department's IT Steering Committee. Another project has been established to address "non-IT" equipment containing embedded microprocessor chip technology, ranging from lifts and security systems to scientific equipment, as these may also be affected.

Current rate of progress is consistent with the targets set by the Central IT Unit of the Cabinet Office and CCTA, namely that:

an audit to identify the work needed to address the date change in the Department's computer systems was completed earlier this year;

prioritised and costed plans for undertaking the work that is needed (which is already underway) will be provided to CCTA by October 1997; preparations for all business critical systems will have been completed by 31 December 1998, subject where appropriate to a final check of end-of-year financial systems by April 1999.

Water Demand

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the demand for water from (i) organic and (ii) conventional agricultural farms; and if he will make a statement. [1324]

Mr. Morley: The Department has commissioned research on present and future irrigation water requirements and the value of various water conservation methods and irrigation techniques in meeting those requirements. The research does not distinguish between organic and conventional agriculture. The final report of the study is expected shortly.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what area of land is currently under set-aside; what percentage this is of agricultural land; and what are the equivalent figures in other EU Member states. [1326]

Mr. Rooker: The information requested is not yet available for the current year. Most farmers have only recently submitted their 1997 IACS applications which detail the areas they have set aside. However, the figures for 1996, as compiled by the European Commission, are given in the following table. The obligatory set-aside rate in 1996 was 10 per cent. but under the Arable Area Payments Scheme (AAPS) small scale producers do not have to set land aside. In addition, farmers may enter more than the minimum 10 per cent. of their arable area into set-aside if they wish.

Member State	Set-aside (hectares)	Set-aside as percentage of land in the AAPS[1]
United Kingdom	485,020	11
Austria	115,340	10
Belgium	17,640	4
Denmark	220,712	11
Finland	169,807	13

[1] Land in the AAPS does not include pasture or areas sown to crops outside the scheme.

Waste Disposal (Hurd Deep)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what environmental monitoring his Department's radiobiology laboratories have conducted at the Hurd Deep site off Alderney; and if he will make a statement on his Department's policy for monitoring and compiling data on the disposal of toxic waste at sea. [1434]

Mr. Morley: MAFF has carried out monitoring for radioactivity in marine materials from around the Channel Islands since 1965, and from around the Hurd Deep itself since 1989. Materials sampled include fish, shellfish, seaweed, sediments and seawater. Results of this monitoring are compiled and published annually along with other result's of MAFF's programme for monitoring levels of radioactivity in the marine environment around the UK. Copies of these publications are placed in the Library of the House. The results show that man-made radioactivity around the Channel Islands is detectable but that levels are very low and give no cause for concern.

The Department also carries out an extensive programme of monitoring and research related to non-radioactive contaminants and the effects of disposal of waste at sea. The dumping of toxic waste at sea is not permitted.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the disposal of intermediate level radioactive waste arising from the UK Atomic Energy Authority's Research programme at the Hurd Deep. [1438]

Mr. Morley: Between 1950 and 1963, around 15,720 tonnes of radioactive waste was disposed of in the Hurd Deep. Most of this material originated from the UKAEA facility at Harwell, and it contained, in total, around 14.6 TBq of alpha activity and 47.0 TBq of beta and gamma activity. All of this waste was categorised at the time as low level. It is possible that very small amounts of waste which today would be regarded as intermediate level were included, but the overall levels of radioactivity in the material are low. Exposure of Channel Islanders to man-made radiation is less than 3 per cent. of the recommended limit for members of the public, and is only a tiny fraction of the radiation dose received from natural sources.

Water Usage

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what statistics his Department collates on the amount of water used each year (a) on individual farms, (b) in farming areas and (c) in the agricultural industry as a whole; and if he will make a statement. [1325]

Mr. Morley: A Survey of Irrigation of Outdoor Crops is held periodically. The most recent survey covered the 1995 crop year, in England. Information about the amount of water used is collected from individual farms, but it is not possible to publish individual details for reasons of confidentiality.

The estimated total volume of water applied in 1995, for outdoor crops, was as follows:

Standard statistical region	Volume of water applied (thousand cubic metres)
North	924
Yorkshire and Humberside	17,767
East Midlands	27,676
East Anglia	62,560
South East	24,707
South West	5,552
West Midlands	21,839
North West	3,041
England	[1]164,067

[1] Figures do not add to total due to rounding.

Results of the 1995 Survey were published in MAFF Statistics Notice 222/96 (revised).

Organic Farming

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what area of land is currently farmed organically; what percentage this is of agricultural land; and what are the equivalent figures in other EU Member States. [1327]

Mr. Morley: As at 30 April 1997, there were 50,772 hectares of land in organic production in the UK. This represents about 0.3 per cent. of the total agricultural land available.

Available information shows that in 1996 organically farmed land constituted less than 1 per cent. of total agricultural area in Belgium, France, Greece, Ireland, Luxembourg, The Netherlands, Portugal and Spain; between 1 per cent. and 2 per cent. in Finland, Germany, Denmark and Italy; between 3 per cent. and 4 per cent. in Sweden; and between 7 per cent. and 8 per cent. in Austria.

[Source of EC statistics: "Impact of EC Regulation 2078/92 on the development of organic farming in the European Union, Dr. Nicolas Lampkin, Welsh Institute of Rural Studies, Aberystwyth"]

Arable Area Payment

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the (a) maximum, (b) minimum and (c) average payment made under the arable area payments scheme in 1996–97. [1723]

Mr. Rooker: The highest payment made for a claim under the 1996 Arable Payments Scheme in England was for £2,007,993. The smallest payment that could be claimed was £60.68 but some claimants may have received less than this because of the application of administrative penalties under the Scheme. The average total payment per claim is estimated to be £23,605.

Animal Identification

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 21 May, Official Report, column 102, on animal identification, what is the Community's deadline for the introduction of the database. [1516]

Mr. Rooker: 31 December 1999. But it is my intention to introduce a computer database well ahead of the Community's deadline.

Technetium (Lobsters)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what level of technetium has been reported in lobsters obtained from the Irish Sea in the vicinity of Sellafield. [1787]

Mr. Morley: Levels of technetium -99 in lobsters from the Irish Sea close to BNFL Sellafield are reported in the MAFF report—Radioactivity in Food and the Environment, 1995. The average level in lobsters was 8,300 Bq/kg in 1995. In 1996 the level rose to 17,900 Bq/kg in the second quarter and then reduced to 6,430 Bq/kg in the last quarter. The annual radiation exposure to the most exposed group associated with lobster consumption was 18μSv in 1995 and 29μSv/year in 1996. This can be compared with the public dose limit of 1000μSv/year and presents no food safety concerns.

Flood Alleviation

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will reassess the need for the Maidenhead, Windsor and Eton Flood Alleviation Scheme with particular reference to climate changes; and if he will make a statement. [1729]

Mr. Morley: There are no plans to review the need for the Maidenhead, Windsor and Eton Flood Alleviation Scheme, which was the subject of a detailed local public inquiry in 1992. The Inspector at the inquiry concluded that there was a compelling need for the scheme to proceed in order to provide protection to some 4,800 households, 700 commercial buildings and major communications links. Also, this Department was satisfied that the Environment Agency's proposed works met the technical, environmental and economic criteria for grant aid.

The possible impact of climate change has been fully considered by the Environment Agency during scheme design. Although there has been a trend towards lower average rainfall in southern England in recent years, studies related to global climate change suggest a possible increase in the frequency and severity of extreme events of the type against which this scheme is intended to provide protection. Whilst there is insufficient evidence to quantify any such changes at present, it would clearly be inappropriate to design the scheme for anything less than the flood conditions experienced in the past 50 years.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

13. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals she has to ensure that retirement pensioners share in rising national prosperity. [889]

Mr. Denham: Our review of pensions will consider the central areas of insecurity for elderly people, including all aspects of the basic pension and its value. In undertaking this review we will ensure that the views of pensioners are heard.

We want to get help to Britain's poorest pensioners and we are commissioning research into the reasons why a million pensioners fail to claim the Income Support to which they are entitled.

Mrs. Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, what plans she has for the basic state pension. [887]

Mr. Denham: We will retain the basic State pension as the foundation of security in retirement provision; it has a vital part to play in providing a decent standard of living in retirement. We will increase it at least in line with prices.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will shortly be announcing details of a review of the central areas of insecurity for elderly people. All aspects of the basic pension will be included in our review.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will assess the cost to public funds of restoring the link between pensions and earnings for all pensioners aged 18 years and over on 31 December 1945. [61]

Mr. Denham: The estimated net cost of restoring the link between the higher of the rise in the Retail Prices Index or Average Earnings for uprating the basic Retirement Pension and linked benefits, for those aged 18 years and over on 31 December 1945 is £5.7 billion in 1997–98.

Notes:

1. Costs rounded to £0.1 billion.
2. Estimate assumes that the earnings link is restored from 1980.
3. Estimate of gross costs was provided by the Government Actuary's Department. Net costs, allowing for savings on income-related benefit expenditure, have been modelled using the 1994–95 Family Resources Survey and the May 1995 Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiry.
4. Estimate is based on 1997–98 prices, benefits and earnings levels and calibrated to the income-related benefit forecasts underlying the 1996 Departmental Report.

Information Technology

21. Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the use of information technology in her Department. [897]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The DSS uses the largest civil computer system in Europe to support the effective and efficient delivery of Social Security services to the people of this country. We will be assessing the Department's plans for Information Technology to ensure that they will provide the improved services, better security and value for money that we want to see in a modernised Social Security system.

Housing Benefit Fraud

22. Ms Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to take steps to reduce housing benefit fraud. [898]

Mr. Denham: We plan to crack down on dishonesty in the benefit system, and clamping down on housing benefit fraud will be a key priority. That is crucial if the public is to have confidence in the welfare system. A number of measures to help prevent, deter and detect housing benefit fraud will be brought in over the next few months and we shall consider what further measures are needed.

Fraud

23. Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures employing new technology she is using to combat social security fraud. [899]

Mr. Denham: New technology is widely used within the Department both to deliver benefits and to combat fraud. Measures include datamatching and the introduction of the Benefit Payment Card.

State Earnings-related Pension Scheme

25. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has for the future of SERPS. [901]

Mr. Denham: We intend to set up a review of pensions which will encompass second tier pensions including SERPS. We will retain SERPS for those who wish to remain in it and introduce a "citizenship pension" to help people who lose out on pension entitlements because they assume responsibility as carers.

Benefits Agency

26. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will cancel all pending contracts or other plans to sell or privatise the property or services currently owned or managed by the Benefits Agency and its staff; and if she will make a statement. [902]

Mr. Field: There is no proposal to privatise any Benefits Agency service.

A number of initiatives are in place which are designed to test the value of involving external suppliers in DSS operations. We are reviewing them against our objective to modernise the delivery of the welfare system.

We also need to measure them against our approach to partnership with the private sector; the implications for customer service, staff and the taxpayer; and our commitment to work within announced spending totals for the first two years of the Government.

We will make announcements in due course.

Income Support

27. Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the number of children in families dependent on income support. [903]

Mr. Keith Bradley: In August 1996 there were around 2.9 million children aged 15 and under living in families dependent on Income Support. Our priority is to develop a modern welfare system which promotes work incentives, reduces poverty and welfare dependency and strengthens community and family life.

Appeal Procedures

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations she has received about social security appeals procedures. [894]

Mr. Keith Bradley: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, will be meeting the President of the Independent Tribunal Service His Honour Judge Bassingthwaighte shortly. We plan to modernise the Social Security system and make savings. The framework for decision making and appeals for the next century must be more streamlined, easier for customers to understand and staff to operate.

28. Ms Mountford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement about social security benefits appeals procedures. [904]

Mr. Denham: We intend to bring forward legislation to improve current decision making and appeals arrangements for all Social Security benefits. Further details will be announced in due course.

Income Support (Minimum Wage)

29. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of the impact of introducing a minimum wage on the overall level of income support payments. [905]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We are committed to introducing a national minimum wage, set seriously, decided not on the basis of a rigid formula, but according to the economic circumstances at the time.

We will set up a Low Pay Commission to advise the Government on the level of national minimum wage. The Commission will take into account the economic effects following the introduction of a minimum wage, including any impact on public expenditure.

Tribunal Centres

30. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will meet (a) representatives of unemployed workers centres and (b) others who deal with social security appeals to discuss tribunal centres. [906]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Tribunal centres are a matter for the President of the Independent Tribunal Service (ITS), His Honour Judge Bassingthwaighte, who informs me that his staff hold regular meetings with trubunal user groups which involve ITS, Benefits Agency staff and representative groups such as the Citizen's Advice Bureau and local Welfare Rights groups.

We plan to modernise the system for decision making and appeals to make it more streamlined and improve the service. We will take into account the views of those people who deal with appeals.

Welfare Reform

31. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the terms of reference of the review being conducted by the Minister of State for Welfare Reform. [907]

Mr. Field: The manifesto set out our objective of providing work incentives and reducing poverty and welfare dependency. The aim of the Department's review will be to develop a strategy by which we will modernise the structure and delivery of social security to:

encourage independence, social cohesion and well being;

develop an active welfare system which supports work, savings and honesty; help tackle effectively unjustifiable social and economic inequalities.

Spending Growth

32. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to curb the annual rate of growth in social security spending. [908]

Mr. Field: Under the last Government the bills from social and economic failure led to spiralling Social Security costs. We plan to reverse that pattern, beginning with our programme to help young people and the long term unemployed to move from welfare to work.

Welfare to Work Programme

33. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the savings to her Department from the introduction of the welfare to work programme. [909]

Mr. Field: We shall consider the impact of the Welfare to Work programme on the Department's expenditure plans as we work up the detail of the various schemes. By improving the standards and skills of the workforce we would expect savings in the longer term.

Lone Parents

34. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the Government's policy towards lone parents on benefit. [910]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Government believe that the best way to help lone mothers is to provide them with help which enables them to move off benefit and into work. This is a high priority. Most lone mothers want to work and we will give them opportunities to do so as part of our welfare to work programme. We will also implement a national childcare strategy which will match the provision of childcare to the needs of the modern labour market. This will help parents, especially lone mothers, to balance family and working life.

Benefit Dependency (Young People)

35. Ms Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the Government's proposals for young people who are dependent on benefit. [911]

Mr. Field: It is important that we do everything we can to help young people out of benefit dependency and into work. One of our first priorities is to get the New Deal up and running—this will give 250,000 under 25-year-olds, unemployed for over 6 months, opportunities for work, education and training.

Basic State Pension

36. Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the level of the basic state pension. [912]

Mr. Denham: We will retain the basic state pension as the foundation of security in retirement provision; it has a vital part to play in providing a decent standard of living in retirement. We will increase it at least in line with prices.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will shortly be announcing details of a review of the central areas of insecurity for elderly people. All aspects of the basic pension will be included in our review.

Future Pensions Provision

37. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to meet old aged pensioners' organisations to discuss future pensions provision; and if she will make a statement. [913]

Mr. Denham: We anticipate that we will meet representatives of pensioners' organisations as part of the Pensions Review. Details of the Review will be announced shortly.

Civil Service (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many civil servants, of each grade in her Department, were of Asian origin on 5 May. [738]

Mr. Field: The information is in the table:

Grade	Number of staff of Asian origin
Senior Civil Service	0
Grade 6	16
Grade 7	1
Senior Executive Officer	3
Higher Executive Officer	24
Executive Officer	503
Administrative Officer	2,064
Administrative Assistant	797
Total	3,408

Information as at 31 March 1997.

Pensioners

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what estimate she has made of the number of pensioners currently living below the poverty line in Britain; [1826]

(2) what plans she has to reduce poverty among pensioners with low incomes. [1825]

Mr. Denham: The poorest pensioners in Britain include the 810,000 to 1,100,000 who do not take up their entitlement to Income Support. We want to get help to them and are commissioning research to establish why they do not claim the Income Support to which is their due.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what estimate she has made of the number of claimants who will have their housing benefit reduced in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 in (i) Great Britain, (ii) Manchester and (iii) Trafford as a result of the decision to extend the single room rent restriction to single people aged between 25 and 59 years; [1634]

(2) what estimate she has made of the total savings which will accrue in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 from the decision to extend the single room rent restriction to single people aged between 25 and 59 years. [1640]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The extension of the single room rent to single people under age 60 was inherited from the previous administration, and it forms part of Departmental expenditure plans. We are reviewing those plans and will announce our decision shortly.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the shortfall between total housing benefit payments to each London borough and their payments and administrative costs in respect of the benefit. [1753]

Mr. Bradley: The information for 1995–96, the latest date for which figures are available, is in the tables.

Halliday Case

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment her Department has made of the implications for Government policy and expenditure of the recent judgment of the House of Lords in respect of the Halliday case; and if she will make a statement. [1520]

Mr. Denham: The implications of the House of Lords' Judgment are being considered urgently. The Chief Adjudication Officer will issue guidance as soon as practicable. In the meantime, the Benefits Agency are taking all steps necessary to ensure proper compliance with the judgment.

Benefits Statistics

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will publish the income levels of recipients of benefits relative to the Council of Europe poverty threshold; and if she will make it her policy to publish such figures regularly in the future. [1755]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the format requested.

The income levels of benefit recipients vary widely and, in particular, benefits which are not income-related are spread across the income distribution. Information on the distribution of benefit expenditure by household income of recipient is given in the 1997 Social Security Departmental Report, page 47. Information on the numbers of individuals reporting income-related benefit receipt by position in the income distribution is provided in Table G of 'Households Below Average Income'; the analysis for 1979 to 1993–94 was published in November 1996. The Council of Europe decency threshold relates to individual earnings, but the income levels of recipients of benefits are more appropriately measured as total income on a benefit unit or household basis as they are in the publications listed above. It is therefore not meaningful to compare these income levels with the Council of Europe threshold.

Retirement Pensions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the present value of the basic retirement pension as a percentage of average earnings; and what it will be in the years (a) 2000, (b) 2010, (c) 2020, (d) 2030 and (e) 2040 if it is increased only in line with prices, assuming that average earnings increase by two per cent. more per year than the retail prices index. [1743]

Mr. Denham: The information is in the table.

Year	Basic standard rate of retirement pension as a percentage of average earnings
1996	17.4
2000	16.1
2020	10.8
2040	7.3

1. The figure for 1996 is based on average full time earnings for all employees in April 1996, from the New Earnings Survey.
2. Forecast figures are on the assumption that average earnings increase by 2 per cent. per year, while the real value of the standard rate of basic retirement pension remains at the 1996–97 level.
3. Percentages in the table are rounded to the nearest 0.1 per cent.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 3 June 1997

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the backlog of cases for each of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate's divisions on 5 May. [795]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The latest available information relates to the end of April 1997 and is given in the table.

	[2]Number
After Entry and Appeals Directorate[3]	20,400
Asylum Directorate[4]	52,400

Nationality Directorate	61,500
Immigration Service Enforcement Directorate[5]	19,200
Finance and Services Directorate[6]	6,700

[2] To the nearest hundred.
[3] Including referred entry clearance applications and appeals awaiting preparation of statements.
[4] Cases awaiting an initial decision and asylum appeals awaiting validation and preparation.
[5] Excluding just over 20,000 cases where illegal entry papers have been served but there is an outstanding asylum appeal/application; these cases are included in the Asylum Directorate figure.
[6] Items of correspondence (mainly passports, letters and new applications being sorted and allocated to caseworkers).

Wheel Clamping

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations his Department has received during the last 12 months on wheel clamping; what action he proposes to take to regulate wheel clamping; and if he will make a statement. [1080]

Mr. Michael: Over the last 12 months, the Home Office has received proposals on wheel clamping from the Automobile Association the British Parking Association, and Legislation on Car Clamping. There have been four Parliamentary Questions, letters and suggestions for specific action to deal with the problem from 37 Members of Parliament, two letters from local authorities and 60 letters from members of the public. The Government consider the present situation on wheel clamping on private land to be unsatisfactory, and we will take a fresh look at the options for dealing with the problem.

Police Authorities

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to abolish the present structure of police authorities; and if he will introduce measures to make police authorities (a) more representative of and (b) more accountable to local communities. [1552]

Mr. Michael: No. There are no national plans at present to change the structure of police authorities. However, in London we are considering arrangements for establishing a new police authority for the Metropolitan Police.

Interpol (Drugs Squad)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what resources his Department has given to Interpol's drug squad in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [1549]

Mr. Michael: Although a significant proportion of its work is in facilitating international drugs inquiries, Interpol does not have a drugs squad.

The Home Office does, however, contribute to the cost of running and staffing the Europol Drugs Unit (EDU), the European Union centre for the exchange and development of criminal intelligence on drug trafficking and other forms of serious trans-national crime.

The Home Offices's contribution to these costs has been:

1993–94	68
1994–95	479
1996–97	803

Some additional costs were incurred by the Home Office as a result of staff time spent on representational, liaison and other duties associated with the work of the Unit.

Closed Circuit Television

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for facilitating the implementation of CCTV crime prevention schemes by local councils. [457]

Mr. Michael: I am considering the future of the closed circuit television Challenge competition as part of our review of existing expenditure programmes. I want to ensure that the resources available for measures to promote community safety are used to best effect. A decision on whether there will be another round of the competition in 1998–99 will be made later in the summer.

Youth Offender Teams

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what resources will be available to youth offender teams; what percentage of their funding will be met from local authority budgets; and if he will make a statement. [1577]

Mr. Michael: The Government are committed to a wide ranging reform of the youth justice system. Our proposals include establishing a National Youth Justice Board and local multi-agency youth offender teams to help ensure high standards and consistency in the delivery of youth justice services. We are currently developing the details of these proposals and will announce these over the coming months.

Prisons

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of prisons (a) currently under construction and (b) being planned indicating when they will be completed, how much each will cost, and how many inmates they will take; and if he will make a statement. [1579]

Ms Joyce Quin: Three new prisons are currently being built under the Private Finance Initiative.

Her Majesty's Prison Altcourse will be a 600 place prison. It is planned that its first prisoner will be received on 1 December 1997. Its Net Present Value (NPV) is £247 million. The NPV covers the costs of construction, finance and operation in terms of fees over the lifetime of the contract.

Her Majesty's Prison Parc will be an 800 place prison. It is planned that its first prisoner will be received on 17 November 1997. Its NPV is £266 million.

Her Majesty's Prison Lowdham Grange will be a 500 place prison. It is planned that its first prisoner will be received on 16 February 1998. Its NPV is £130 million.

The Prison Service plans to provide a further 2,400 places at new prisons over the next three years. Planning approval has been given to re-build Her Majesty's Prison Pucklechurch, near Bristol, as a 400 place prison for males under 21 years old. Plans to build an 800 place prison at Agecroft in Salford are subject to the outcome of a planning inquiry, expected shortly. The remaining 1,200 places will be provided by two more prisons once suitable sites have been agreed.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Government Agenda

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what contribution he intends his Department to make to the presentation and delivery of the Government's agenda. [2076]

Dr. David Clark: I intend to publish a White Paper in the autumn on our programme for the regeneration of government. This will set out our unified approach to providing accountable government which is attuned to people's interests and concerns. I have already announced my intention to publish a White Paper on Freedom of Information before the Summer Recess. I will bring forward proposals on the accountability, efficiency and transparency of Departments, Executive Agencies, and other public bodies. I will develop our commitment to more efficient and effective public services. My Department will consult widely with the general public on our plans to transform the existing programme of charters to deliver what people want from public services; to remove unnecessary bureaucracy from the daily lives of citizens and small business; and to use Information Technology in the delivery of enhanced and accessible services to the public.

My Department will be taking a coherent and energetic approach, looking across departmental boundaries, to realise our aim of accountable, accessible, responsive and efficient government.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Chickens

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many broiler chickens slaughtered in the United Kingdom have been rejected as unfit for human consumption since 24 April 1996. [1120]

Mr. Rooker: The information requested is as follows:

	Total throughput	Unfit for human consumption	Percentage
Great Britain	695,243,052	8,394,463 (to 27 April 1997)	1.2
Northern Ireland	58,091,168	611,814 (to 24 March 1997)	1.0

Departmental Publications

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food by what means his Department makes available its publications in (a) Braille, (b) audio tape and (c) large print; and how this is publicised. [1677]

Mr. Morley: The following material is available in special formats for those with impaired vision or hearing:

The new microwave labels:

Braille booklet

Large print booklet

Audio cassette.

Healthy eating for older people:

Audio cassette

Large print booklet.

These were produced in association with and distributed through the RNIB. The large print booklets are, in addition, available free of charge from MAFF's storage and distribution house.

Food safety in the kitchen: Video in British Sign Language.

Healthy eating: Video in British Sign Language.

These were produced in association with and distributed through the British Deaf Association.

Social Model (Disability)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to adopt a social model of disability in framing all future and amending previous relevant legislation and guidance; and if he will make a statement. [1678]

Mr. Morley: Within the Ministry, those with responsibility for the development or review of policies or practices are required to consider the potential effect on any particular group, including those with a disability, and consult as appropriate. These requirements reflect the definitions in the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 and will be reviewed in the light of any relevant amendments.

Scrapie

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of scrapie have been confirmed since it became a notifiable disease. [2075]

Mr. Rooker: The following table shows the number of cases which have been confirmed as positive since January 1993 when scrapie became a notifiable disease.

	1993	1994	1995	1996	1997 (until end of May)
Confirmed positive	328	235	254	453	213

Cases are greater in each year than those previously reported on 19 February 1997, Official Report, column 635, owing to the inclusion of cases from research studies which have not been previously reported.

Public Access (Lancashire)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the total acreage of uncultivated open land and moorland in Lancashire to which the public are denied access solely by reason of ownership. [1017]

Ms Eagle: I have been asked to reply.

We have no information about the extent of uncultivated open land and moorland in Lancashire, nor is there any information about landowners who have been approached about opening up their land to the public.

DEFENCE

White Paper

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to publish the 1997 White Paper on Defence. [1274]

Dr. John Reid: As the Strategic Defence Review will be conducted during 1997, it would not be appropriate for the Department to publish this year a forward-looking statement of policy in the form of the Statement on the Defence Estimates (SDE). Factual material on the activities of the Department and the Armed Forces in the last year, which is usually contained in the SDE, will appear in an expanded MOD Performance Report which the Department plans to publish in the Autumn.

Pricing and Quality Services Organisation

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the future of the Pricing and Quality Services Organisation within the MOD Procurement Executive; and if he will make a statement. [2013]

Mr. Spellar: A new Defence Agency, formed from the Pricing and Quality Services (PQS) elements of the Procurement Executive, was established on 1 June 1997. The agency will be known as Specialist Procurement Services (SPS). The Chief of Defence Procurement will be the Owner of the Agency and the current head of PQS will be the first Chief Executive (CE); subsequent CEs will be appointed through external competition. The Chief Executive has been set the following Key Targets for the first year of operation:

1. Establish Service Level Arrangements (SLAs) with customers, covering the activities of the following business units; Pricing, Quality Assurance and Cost Forecasting.
2. Develop/implement methods of measuring customer satisfaction.
3. Offer Cost Forecasting advice on 90 per cent. of Category A and B equipment projects identified within the agreed Equipment Approvals Committee (EAC) programme.
4. Develop a programme for accreditation to the Investors in People (IIP) standard.
5. Audit 95 per cent. of core accounts in the first year and 100 per cent. of major accounts over a three year period with respect to Government Furnished Equipment (GFE).
6. Develop an efficiency and business improvement programme.

I will arrange for copies of the Agency's Framework Document and Corporate Plan to be placed in the Library of both Houses.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Teaching Staff (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of (a) teachers and (b) lecturers come from ethnic minority backgrounds; and what initiatives he proposes to increase their number. [1042]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department does not collect the information required. The Teacher Training Agency has introduced various initiatives to attract ethnic minority entrants to teaching, including targeting recruitment advertisements. The Agency is responsible for allocating student numbers to teacher training institutions, based on the quality assessment of the institution. Within any given quality category, trainers with special features, including their record in recruiting people from ethnic minorities, may be given priority over others.

Performing Arts Graduates

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he proposes to take to ensure that the numbers of students graduating in the performing arts in each year more nearly equates to the employment opportunities available to them. [1345]

Dr. Howells: None. Individual universities and colleges are responsible for the allocation of places on performing arts courses in the light of demand from suitably qualified applicants, whose numbers may be influenced by job opportunities.

Salaries (University Vice-chancellors)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will list in rank order the salaries of the vice-chancellors of United Kingdom universities indicating for each institution the number of students enrolled; [1443]

(2) what assessment he has made of the advantages and disadvantages of setting a salary scale for university vice-chancellors; [1470]

(3) what factors underlie the range of variation in the salary and benefits packages offered to vice-chancellors by United Kingdom universities. [1469]

Dr. Howells: Universities are independent bodies and it is for them to determine levels of pay for their staff, including the vice-chancellor, in the light of their own particular needs and requirements. Other than requiring that universities take account of the Government priorities for public sector pay, the Department plays no part in considering or setting academic salary scales and does not collect information about the salaries of vice-chancellors.

The Higher Education Funding Councils for England, Scotland and Wales and the Department of Education for Northern Ireland require universities to disclose the salary levels of senior staff. This information is published in the annual accounts of individual universities. Information on student enrolment is published by the Higher Education Statistics Agency (HESA) in its reference volume series: Students in Higher Education Institutions.

Departmental Computer Systems

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to ensure that his Department's computer system will be millennium compliant; and if he will make a statement. [1248]

Dr. Howells: The Department's plan for ensuring that all its computer systems will be millennium compliant by early 1999 are well established. A project has been set up which has already identified all the Department's computer systems which will be affected by the Millennium date change. A detailed impact analysis in under way. This project will provide detailed costings covering all the work needed up to the Millennium. We will take forward those changes where they are cost justified.

Funding (Further Education and Tertiary Colleges)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to reform the funding of further education and tertiary colleges; and if he will make a statement. [1461]

Dr. Howells: Under the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 it is the statutory responsibility of the Further Education Funding Council for England to give financial support to the governing bodies of institutions in the further and higher education sector for the provision of further education. My right hon. Friend has no plans to change that arrangement.

Training Costs Estimates

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate his Department has made of the amounts currently spent by employers on training; and if he will list equivalent figures for 1987 provided by the Training Agency in the study, Training in Britain (1989); and if he will make a statement. [1233]

Dr. Howells: Employers in the UK are estimated to have spent £10.6 billion on formal training courses and supervised on-the-job training in 1993. This estimate is the latest available and was published in the report 'Employer Provided Training in the UK 1993'. An equivalent figure is not available from the 'Training in Britain' study because of differences in survey methods and the definitions of training used. The study estimated that total expenditure by employers in Great Britain in 1986–87 was £14.4 billion.

Estimating employers' total expenditure on training is inherently difficult. While the latest survey provides a more accurate estimate of expenditure than that previously available, on its own the estimate does not convey much about training behaviour. More significantly, the survey shows a rising trend in the number of employees receiving training, both on and off-the-job. However we know that many companies—especially smaller ones—face difficulties in obtaining the training their businesses need. That is why we have pledged to help them, particularly by making the Investors in People Standard more accessible to small firms, and through the development of a University for Industry.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment by what means his Department makes available its publications in (a) Braille, (b) audio tape and (c) large print; and how this is publicised. [1681]

Dr. Howells: The Department produces several of its information leaflets and booklets in Braille, on audio tape and in large print. The majority are unpriced and are available from the Department's mailing houses on request. The priced ones are available from The Stationery Office.

The availability of Braille, audio tape and large print is normally publicised by a reference in the standard printed version of the publication along with a telephone number for those wishing to place orders. We also send specimen copies to organisations representing blind people for wider dissemination.

Unemployment (Young People)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many persons aged 16 to 18 years are not in employment, full-time education or on Government programmes. [1648]

Dr. Howells: In Autumn 1996, there were 300,000 16 to 18 year olds not in employment, full-time education or on government programmes in the UK, according to the Labour Force Survey.

Equal Opportunities Commission

Valerie Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans the Government have to review the role and function of the Equal Opportunities Commission. [2023]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Against the background of this Government's firm commitment to equal opportunities and the practice of quinquennial policy and financial management reviews of non-departmental public bodies, the Department will conduct a thorough review of the Equal Opportunities Commission during 1997–98. The first stage of the review will take the form of a "prior options" study with the following terms of reference:

1. To review the functions of the Equal Opportunities Commission, the effectiveness with which they have been carried out and the likely need in future for these functions.

2. To consider the case for the continued existence of the Equal Opportunities Commission and how its functions can be best fulfilled.

3. To consider the powers, constitutional status, membership and terms of reference of the Equal Opportunities Commission.

4. The review will have regard to the Government's equal opportunities policies and to the duties of the Commission as laid down in statute.

5. To report the outcome of the review by 11 September 1997.

This study is now underway and I would welcome comments from interested parties. Comments, which may be made public unless respondents specifically request otherwise, should be sent, by 4 July, to:

Jane Anderson
Divisional Manager
Sex and Race Equality Division
Department for Education and Employment
Room 401

Modern Apprenticeships

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many young people are currently undertaking modern apprenticeships; what is his assessment of the contribution of the scheme to redressing the skills balance; and what plans he has for its further extension. [1698]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 2 June 1997]: In February 1997 (the latest date for which figures are available), there were 76,300 young people in training on Modern Apprenticeships.

The initiative is making a vital contribution to raising skills. Evaluation studies have consistently shown that Modern Apprenticeships are highly popular, of high quality, and are meeting the expectations of both employers and young people.

We want to sustain and build on this success and intend to develop Modern Apprenticeships in every sector where there is a demand. There are currently 69 frameworks approved with a further 10 expected in the next 12 months. There is every sign that employers' demand for Modern Apprentices will continue to grow and we and Training and Enterprise Councils will consider how best to respond to that demand.

WALES

Development Orders

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to review planning policy in Wales in regard to the existence of outstanding interim development orders; and if he will list the non-time limited planning permissions currently in force. [857]

Mr. Win Griffiths: My right hon. Friend and I currently have no plans to review outstanding interim development orders in Wales. There are no non-time limited mineral planning permissions currently in force.

Devolution

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the need for changes in the role of the National Audit Office in relation to public expenditure in Wales in the event of Welsh devolution. [1090]

Mr. Ron Davies: A Welsh Assembly would be subject to rigorous standards of audit and accountability. We will set out our detailed proposals on these and other matters in the White Paper to be published in the summer.

Mr. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ensure that all departmental expenditure in support of the Government's campaign for devolution is separately identified. [1087]

Mr. Davies: All Welsh Office publicity expenditure related to the proposals for a Welsh Assembly will be separately identifiable.

Beef Production

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit farms engaged in beef production in Alyn and Deeside. [1305]

Mr. Win Griffiths: My right hon. Friend and I hope to visit farms across Wales when the opportunity arises.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will raise problems faced by beef farmers in Alyn and Deeside with EU officials; and if he will make a statement. [1307]

Mr. Griffiths: My right hon. Friend and I will ensure that the interests of farmers throughout Wales are considered when we prepare for such meetings.

River Dee Bridge

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects both the new River Dee Bridge and Connah's Quay to be open to traffic. [1301]

Mr. Hain: Flintshire County Council are responsible for this scheme. They estimate completion late this year.

Unemployment

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is his estimate of the real level of unemployment in (a) Merthyr Tydfil and Ryhmney and (b) Wales; [1231]

(2) if he will assess the findings contained in the report, "The Real Level of Unemployment", by the Centre for Regional Economic and Social Research, Sheffield Hallam university, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement. [1234]

Mr. Hain: The Office for National Statistics is currently conducting a public consultation on labour market statistics. I welcome this review because I am extremely concerned at the high levels of joblessness in Wales not measured by the claimant count. I will write to my hon. Friend when the review is concluded.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to take people off benefit and into (a) work and (b) training; and what will be the role of further education colleges in such plans. [1258]

Mr. Hain: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 21 May 1997, Official Report, column 75. The Government's Welfare to Work programme for unemployed young people "the New Deal" will have four options. Three of these: working with employers, voluntary organisations and the environmental task force, will involve accredited training for a day a week. The training could include college based courses and on the job training. The fourth option is full time study towards an approved qualification. I would expect Further Education Colleges to make a significant contribution to the success of the programme.

Film Industry

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to promote the film industry in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [1331]

Mr. Hain: Welsh Office Officials are currently talking to people in the industry about its potential for economic growth. Financial support for the industry is being channelled through the Arts Council of Wales, Welsh Development Agency and Cardiff Bay Development Corporation who are providing grant aid to the new Media Agency for Wales. The Arts Council has also distributed some £1.5 million of Lottery money to film projects throughout Wales.

Open Government

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he proposes to enhance openness in government. [1263]

Mr. Ron Davies: We intend to introduce a Bill to strengthen data protection controls and a White Paper will be published on proposals for a Freedom of Information Bill. I shall shortly be announcing improvements to the meetings of the Welsh Grand Committee.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he estimates money saved from the assisted places scheme will become available for local education authority schools; and if he will make a statement. [1255]

Mr. Hain: Subject to Parliamentary approval to the Education (Schools) Bill, savings through the phased abolition of the Assisted Places Scheme will start to become available in the 1998–99 financial year.

Local Education Authorities

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future role of local education authorities. [1259]

Mr. Hain: We value the contribution made by LEAs and look forward to working in partnership with them.

Small Businesses

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many small businesses there are in Wales. [1265]

Mr. Hain: Official statistics on small business numbers are not available separately for Wales. The available data relate to VAT-registered enterprises only and therefore exclude many firms with a turnover below the VAT threshold. These figures show that in 1996 some 60,000 VAT-registered enterprises in Wales had a turnover of less than £250,000.

Child Labour

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to ensure the enforcement of existing legislation to outlaw the illegal employment of school age children. [1541]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The Government are considering how the existing system for protecting children who work might be improved.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if Wales will have the option of setting its own minimum wage following devolution. [1809]

Mr. Ron Davies: Our plans for a Welsh Assembly do not entail its having powers of primary legislation. On this and other issues, it would operate within the statutory framework applying to the whole of England and Wales.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Youth Court System

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the Government expenditure on the youth court system in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [1576]

Mr. Hoon: I have figures for the magistrates courts system of which the youth court is a part. No separate expenditure figures are published for the youth court alone. However the following estimates are based on total revenue expenditure on magistrates courts apportioned to youth court work in proportion to the total of youth court work to aggregate magistrates court work for each year, measured by the weighted caseload system.

1993–94: £15 million

1994–95: £18 million

1995–96: £21 million

1996–97: £24 million.

Over these five years the number of defendants dealt with by the youth court has doubled.

Departmental Computer Systems

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what plans there are to ensure that his Department's computer systems are millennium compliant; and if he will make a statement. [1238]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor's Department, the Court Service, the Public Trust Office, the Public Record Office and the Northern Ireland Court Service have established Year 2000 compliance projects. Their programmes of work follow the recommended approach identified by the Central Information Technology Unit and the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency, recognising their milestones for the completion of key tasks. The Chief Land Registrar will be replying directly to the Question on behalf of the Land Registry.

Letter from Stuart Hill to Mr. Nigel Jones, dated 3 June 1997:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION–MILLENNIUM COMPLIANCE

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, to reply to your recent question concerning plans to ensure that the Land Registry's computer systems are millennium compliant.

The Registry set up a project early in 1996 to identify potential problems and manage any necessary changes. An investigation has been undertaken in respect of mainframe software to identify all potential problems and the solutions required. The results indicated that 3 per cent. of the software may require attention. Further investigations are also being carried out on our smaller PC based systems and software is tested for use throughout the Registry.

External suppliers of Registry mainframe software have also been contacted to supply information regarding their own plans for millennium compliance. Contract documentation to be used in all future procurements has been revised to ensure that the problem will not be perpetuated in any newly purchased products.

It is our aim that all Land Registry computer systems will be millennium compliant by 1 April 1998 to allow at least one full financial year of operation.

Please let me know if you require any further information.

HEALTH

Capital Developments

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the capital developments for which business cases have been submitted since 1 April 1994 in (a) Newcastle City Health Trust, (b) RVI and Hexham Trust, Newcastle and (c) Freeman Hospital Trust, Newcastle, indicating in each case when it was submitted; where (i) NHS Executive and (ii) Treasury approval was given; when tenders were accepted; and when work started on site. [1334]

Mr. Milburn: The table shows the schemes for which an outline business case has been formally submitted to the National Health Service Executive and where capital costs are above the Trusts' delegated limits.

Lariam

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's policy relating to the use of the anti-malarial drug lariam. [1485]

Ms Jowell: Mefloquine (Lariam) is a highly effective drug in both preventing and treating malaria. It is particularly valuable where malaria is resistant to other medicines. The Department's policy relating to the use of mefloquine is outlined in the memorandum "Health Information for Overseas Travel" a free copy of which has been provided to all general practitioners. Further information was included in the Chief Medical Officer's Update 10 (May 1996) which was sent to all general practitioners. As with the use of all medicines, the benefits have to be weighed against the risk of adverse reactions.

We are aware of public concerns about the safety of mefloquine, particularly about the nature of the suspected serious adverse reactions reported. Guidelines for health professionals on the use of malaria prophylaxis, including mefloquine, are prepared by an informal group of experts convened by the Malaria Reference Laboratory of the Public Health Laboratory Service. The guidelines are published, most recently in the British Medical Journal in 1995. The group is presently producing a new set of guidelines which, once the consultation process is complete, will be published as soon as possible.

GP Fundholders

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was paid in fees to general practitioner fundholder managers in (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97; and if he will break down the figures by health authority. [1801]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is not held centrally. General practitioner fundholder managers are paid from the Practice Fund Management Allowance (PFMA) but their salary is not identified as a separate item within total PFMA allocations. The total PFMA expenditure for 1995–96 was £109.6 million and allocations of PFMA for 1996–97 were £153.3 million.

Children (Employment)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to ensure the enforcement of existing legislation to outlaw the illegal employment of school-age children. [1542]

Mr. Boateng: We are considering how the existing system for protecting children under minimum school leaving age who work might be improved.

Prisoners (HIV/AIDS)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department is responsible for funding the treatment of prisoners with HIV/AIDS. [1154]

Ms Jowell: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Diplomatic Missions (Parking Fines)

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many parking fines were incurred by diplomatic missions in London during 1996. [2029]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: During 1996 the London diplomatic missions incurred a total of 1,676 unpaid parking fines, which is slightly more than the 1995 figure of 1,586. In February this year this department wrote to all diplomatic missions to give them an opportunity to pay off all outstanding parking tickets, or appeal to have the ticket cancelled. Since then payments totalling £48,640.00 have been received, compared with £11,600.00 in 1996. The table below shows only missions which have 11 or more fines outstanding.

Consular Fees

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to change consular fees. [2021]

Mr. Fatchett: An order in Council was made on 20 May which reduces both the cost of a 5 year multiple entry visa and the cost of a certificate of entitlement and completes the 3 staged increase in settlement visa fees designed to achieve full cost recovery in this category. The Order also abolishes the fee for the confirmation of the right of abode (now obsolete). The Order will come into effect on 10 June.

PRIME MINISTER

Question Time

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will estimate the annual reduction in the number of visitors to the Strangers' Gallery during oral questions to him consequent upon the change to their timing. [958]

The Prime Minister: Admission of the public to the Strangers Gallery is a matter for the House authorities.

Disability

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will nominate a Minister in each Department to help identify and to overcome obstacles to ability, employment, education and mobility among people with real or apparent disability; [1227]

(2) what considerations and consultations led him to do without a Minister with overall responsibility for disability issues. [1226]

The Prime Minister: The Government place great importance on ensuring equal opportunities for all groups, including disabled people. By moving the disability portfolio from the Department of Social Security to the Department for Education and Employment the Government has signalled a move away from treating disabled people as recipients of benefit towards a culture which will value their wider role in society as people willing and able to take advantage of education, training and employment opportunities.

My right hon. Friend, the Minister for Employment, Welfare to Work and Equal Opportunities and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Employment and Equal Opportunities now deal with disability issues.

My right hon. Friend will act as a focal point across Government for disability issues and will be working with Ministerial colleagues in their Departments to ensure that the needs of all disabled people are addressed as policies are being developed. In this way, my right hon. Friend will have an input into policy as it affects disabled people whilst responsibility for implementing specific areas will remain with the relevant Departments.

Podiums and Backdrops

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister how much each Department has spent since 1 May on podiums and backdrops. [1224]

The Prime Minister: This is a matter for the individual departments. No central records are kept.

Minister without Portfolio

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister what is the role of the Minister without Portfolio; and for what reason he is excluded from the rota for oral questions. [1225]

The Prime Minister: My hon. Friend's role is to assist me and my Ministerial colleagues in implementing Government policy and presenting it effectively.

My hon. Friend is not in charge of a Department. Therefore—in line with the practice of the Minister without Portfolio in the previous administration—he will not have a slot on the rota for oral questions.

Hong Kong

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to attend the hand-over ceremony in Hong Kong. [1467]

The Prime Minister: His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales and my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs will both attend the hand-over ceremony in Hong Kong. I am still considering whether I will be able to attend.

Horse and Dog Racing

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister which Department has ministerial responsibility for horse and dog racing. [1717]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 June 1997]: Such Ministerial responsibility as there is for horse and dog racing arises from the sport's close links with betting. The Home Office is responsible for the betting legislation.

Government Contracts

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the public relations firms awarded Government contracts in each year since 1992, indicating the nature and value of the contract in each instance. [1639]

The Prime Minister: The information requested is not held centrally for all Government Departments.

Voluntary Organisations and Charities

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 22 May, Official Report, column 121, on the transfer of responsibility for charities and voluntary organisations, if he will publish the responses and a summary of the responses to his policy document, "Building a Future Together", relating to the specific issue of transferring responsibility for voluntary organisations and charities to the Home Office. [1716]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 June 1997]: The Labour Party Policy Document published in March and the covering letter invited organisations and individuals from the voluntary sector to make their views known on how Government should structure its responsibilities for the voluntary sector. No one argued for responsibility for the sector to remain at the Department of National Heritage and views expressed to the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) before and after the election were that there should be a clear focus for Government activity to support, nurture and work with the sector. Representatives of the voluntary sector and other respondents positively welcomed the return of the responsibility to the Home Office.

Medical and Dental Officers

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement about the pay of medical and dental officers in the Armed Forces. [2096]

The Prime Minister: The Armed Forces Pay Review Body has made recommendations on the pay of medical and dental officers in the Armed Forces. The Review Body recommends that the daily rate of basic pay should be increased by an average of 3.4 per cent. from 1 April. They have further proposed some significant changes to the pay structures of Service medical and dental officers which will see many forms of additional payments, such as consultant pay, consolidated into basic pay. The Review Body also mentioned that it welcomed the fact that the Ministry of Defence was, in future, proposing to base the pensions of Service medical and dental officers on representative rates of their own salaries rather than that of their combatant counterparts. These changes will serve to give a greater degree of comparability between the pay of Defence Medical Staff and their counterparts in the NHS.

The Government has decided to accept the Review Body's recommendations. Along with the earlier recommendations of the Armed Forces Pay Review Body, and the recommendations of the other Review Bodies, these will be staged, with 2 per cent. of the award being back dated to 1 April, and the remainder being payable from 1 December.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Indemnity Undertakings

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many indemnity undertakings were given by departments under section 16 of the National Heritage Act 1980 for the six-month period ended 31 March; and what was the value of (a) any contingent liabilities in respect of such undertakings given at any time under that section which remain outstanding as at 31 March, (b) non-statutory Government indemnities in respect of loans handled by the Government Art Collection which remain outstanding as at 31 March and (c) non-statutory undertakings to Her Majesty in respect of loans from the Royal Collection which remain outstanding at 31 March. [2027]

Mr. Chris Smith: The provision for the Government Indemnity Scheme is made by the National Heritage Act 1980. The scheme facilitates public access to loans of works of art and other objects for public display made to museums, galleries and other such institutions by private owners and non-national institutions. It does this by indemnifying lenders against loss or damage to their loan. Loans covered by the scheme must be for public benefit. The scheme also covers loans of such objects for study purposes within institutions where this would contribute materially to the public's understanding or appreciation of the loan—for example through a scholarly publication.

In the six month period ended 31 March 1997, the following undertakings to indemnify were given under section 16 by the relevant Departments for objects on loan to national and non-national institutions:

	Numbers
Department of National Heritage	469
Scottish Office Education and Industry Department	66
Welsh Office Education Department	65
Department of Education for Northern Ireland	28

The value of contingent liabilities in respect of undertakings given at anytime under section 16 and which remained outstanding at 31 March 1997 is:

Department of National Heritage: £1,337,264,837

Scottish Office Education and Industry Department: £38,701,845

Welsh Office Education Department: £60,611,806

Department of Education for Northern Ireland: £10,678,989

The value of non-statutory Government Indemnities to cover loans handled by the Government Art Collection and which remained outstanding at 31 March 197 is:

Value: £9,000,000

The value of non-statutory Undertakings given to Her Majesty in respect of loans from the Royal Collection and which remained outstanding at 31 March 1997 is:

Value: £100,327,077

National Newspapers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has for new regulations covering the ownership of national newspapers.[1822]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 2 June 1997]: I have been asked to reply. My Department has no immediate plans for new regulations covering the transfer of ownership of national newspapers, however the Department of National Heritage is maintaining regular monitoring of the impact of various factors and policies on the media, including control of cross-media ownership.

Disability

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make it his policy to adopt a social model of disability in framing all future and amending previous relevant legislation and guidance; and if he will make a statement. [1666]

Mr. Tom Clarke: I shall be seeking to ensure that any proposed relevant future legislation and guidance issued by my Department reflects our manifesto commitment to establishing:

"comprehensive, enforceable civil rights for disabled people against discrimination in society or at work, developed in partnership with all interested parties".

It will also reflect, as appropriate, the outcome of the consultation being undertaken by the Department for Education and Employment on the issue of the definition of disability.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Homes

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy with regard to the funding of Scottish Homes for the remainder of the present financial year. [87]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 19 May 1997]: I can confirm that Scottish Homes grant in aid for 1997–98, as set out in "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1997–98 to 1999–2000", is £264.899 million.

I am making an additional £1 million available for the Scottish Rough Sleepers Initiative this year. Because this Initiative is funded through Scottish Homes, this extra money will be added to Scottish Homes' grant in aid.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about Government policy on private finance initiative for school building programmes. [1083]

Mr. Brian Wilson: A number of education authorities are considering the potential of the private finance initiative and public private partnerships to assist their school building programmes. We are committed to improving the efficiency and effectiveness of that process and will be offering authorities practical advice and assistance to that end.

Miscarriages of Justice

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to set up the independent body to be established under the Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Act 1997 to consider cases of alleged miscarriages of justice. [1275]

Mr. McLeish: My right hon. Friend supports the establishment of an independent Scottish Criminal Cases Review Commission in principle, but further preparatory work will be required before a decision can be taken on implementation of the relevant provisions of the 1997 Act. He cannot at this stage say precisely when the Commission might be set up.

Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Act

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultation he will initiate before seeking to bring into force those provisions of the Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Act 1997 which require his consent or subordinate legislation. [1276]

Mr. McLeish: We intend to consult the judiciary and other interested parties, as appropriate, before making orders under section 65(2) of the 1997 Act.

Fisheries Protection Agency

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about performance targets for the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency for 1997–98. [2011]

Mr. Dewar: For the financial year 1997–98 I have set the following targets:

Aerial surveillance percentage of hours flown on task: 85 per cent.

Aerial surveillance cost per aircraft sighting: £82

Marine surveillance utilisation of effective patrol days: 96 per cent.

cost per boarding: £2,685

Marine surveillance number of boardings at sea: 2,200[1] landing declarations checked against actual catches 40 per cent.

Sea Fisheries inspectorate cost per logsheet check: £65

80 per cent. of cases for prosecution to be reported within 6 weeks of offence being detected and 95 per cent. within 8 weeks

Number of cases where court proceedings are taken as percentage of offences reported to prosecuting authorities: 80 per cent.

[1] This target is 400 less than that for 1996–97 and reflects the reduction from 300 to nil of Royal Navy patrol days contracted from the Ministry of Defence.

In order to ensure that the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency uses its resources efficiently, I have set it a target to achieve cash releasing efficiency gains of 2.0 per cent. during 1996–97.

The Chief Executive will be directly accountable to me for the achievement of these targets, which will be reported in the Agency's Annual Report.

Boundary Commission

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the members of the Boundary Commission for Scotland. [2010]

Mr. Dewar: My predecessor reappointed Dr. Charles M. Glennie CBE and Professor Urlan A. Wannop to the Boundary Commission for Scotland from 1 January 1997 to 31 December 1997.

The other members of the Commission are:

Madam Speaker—ex-officio, Chairman.

The Hon. Lady Cosgrove, appointed as Deputy Chairman by the Lord President of the Court of Session from 1 January 1997 to 31 December 1999.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Departmental Publications

Mr. Burstow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade by what means her Department makes available its publications in (a) Braille, (b) audio tape and (c) large print; and how this is publicised. [1679]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: In discussions with the RNIB and other interested organisations, the Department seeks to ensure that its publications are accessible to the visually impaired.

To this end, our consumer advice on metrication changes in 1995 was published and distributed in Braille by the RNIB on behalf of the Department. More recently, audio advice about tactile danger warnings and about risks of carbon monoxide poisoning have been made available to those with visual impairment through COI's regular Sound Advice audio tapes, which are distributed to over 4,500 organisations dealing with blind and partially sighted people.

Also guidance will shortly be issued within the Department aimed at making printed material easier to read for visually impaired people.

The Department also has a range of information about its policies, programmes and publications on the Internet (http.\\www.dti.gov.uk\). It is possible to print all DTI pages from the Internet in large print; the pages are also available in audio to those who have access to a Talking Computer.

Departmental Computer Systems

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to ensure that her Department's computer systems are millennium compliant; and if she will make a statement. [1244]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: Following an initial impact assessment, my Department has initiated a programme of changes to its IT systems which will make them compliant with the Century date change. This programme is expected to be completed in the Spring 1999.

Exports

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list on the basis of July to December 1973 = 100, the increase in United Kingdom relative export unit values in dollars for each year since 1970 together with United Kingdom share of volume of exports of manufactures by main manufacturing countries. [1556]

Mrs. Roche: The information requested is not available. Data on relative export unit values are available only from 1975. Data based on 1990 = 100 between 1975 and 1996Q1 are available on the Central Shared Database which can be accessed from the Library. Data on the UK share of exports of manufactures by the main manufacturing countries for 1982 to 1992Q3 based on 1985 weights are published in the February 1993 Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Fireworks

Mr. Pike: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations her Department has received in the last 12 months relating to the misuse of fireworks; what consultations her Department has undertaken on firework safety in the last 12 months; what action she proposes to take to regulate the (a) sale and (b) use of fireworks; and if she will make a statement. [1441]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: My Department has received several hundred complaints from the public about the misuse of fireworks and I propose shortly to consult interested organisations on draft regulations to introduce additional restrictions on the types of fireworks which should be sold to the public, including some types of fireworks which feature in complaints of misuse.

British Airways and American Airlines

Sir George Young: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the proposed alliance of British Airways and American Airlines, following her meeting with Commissioner van Miert. [1505]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade met Commissioner van Miert on Tuesday 20 May for a preliminary discussion of the proposed alliance between British Airways and American Airlines, and other competition matters. It is not the President of the Board of Trade's policy to make public statements about the merits of individual competition cases in which she will be responsible for making decisions.

Bus Mergers

Mr. Canavan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement about the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the merger between FirstBus and SB Holdings and the implications for Midland Bluebird. [1153]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 2 June 1997]: The MMC's report on the acquisition by FirstBus plc of SB Holdings Ltd. (SBH) was published in January 1997. In line with the MMC's recommendations, the then Minister for Corporate and Consumer Affairs, Mr. John Taylor, asked the Director General of Fair Trading (DGFT) to seek undertakings from FirstBus to divest the business of its subsidiary Midland Bluebird, plus part of the Glasgow operations of SBH. In the event that FirstBus has not identified a firm buyer that has been approved by the Secretary of State by 24 October 1997, the undertakings which are being sought will provide for the divestment of SBH in its entirety without divestment of any of Midland Bluebird's operations. The DGFT will advise my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on the outcome of his discussions with FirstBus in due course.

Small Firms (Definition)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what definition he will use to describe small firms, in terms of number of employees and turnover, when he introduces the fair payment of commercial debts bill; and if he will make a statement. [1277]

Mrs. Roche: We will consult on the details of the Fair Payment of Commercial Debts Bill in the summer. We will ask businesses, their representative organisations and other interested bodies for their views about the extent and application of the legislation for a Statutory Right to Interest.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the number and percentage of deduction from earnings orders in force to recover arrears of maintenance assessments carried out by the Child Support Agency on absent parents (a) in total and (b) by regional office for each year since the establishment of the agency. [1355]

Mr. Bradley: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Ms Roseanna Cunningham, dated 2 June 1997:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about deduction from earnings orders (DEOs) issued by the Child Support Agency.

I should first of all point out that although DEOs are mainly used as a collection method where the AP has not co-operated, they may be used as a preferred payment method by absent parents and are not solely used for collection of arrears payments.

It is not possible to provide the regional breakdown you requested. However information has been collected on the number of DEOs issued since April 1993. The attached table shows the number of DEOs issued and how they compare with the Agency's live load.

I hope this is helpful.

Period	DEOs issued	Live and assessed caseload
1993–94	2,600	180,000
1994–95	32,027	368,000
1995–96	52,931	462,000
1996–97	57,898	579,000

All live and assessed figures are for year end with the exception of the 1996–97 figure which is February 1997 data from Analytical Services Division Quarterly Summary of Statistics. This is the most recent data available.

Ms Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average time taken by the CSA to complete an assessment review; and what action she intends to take to reduce this time. [1360]

Mr. Bradley: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Ms Roseanna Cunningham, dated 2 June 1997:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency assessment reviews.

The first part of your question asks about the average time taken to complete in assessment review. Under Child Support Agency legislation, there are a number of different reviews that can be requested by parties to an assessment. (which will include the absent parent, parent/person with care and child in Scotland). Any of the interested parties can ask for a review of their assessment by another child support officer if they disagree with the decision of the original child support officer. This is referred to as a second tier review. They may also request a change of circumstance review if a change has occurred that may affect their maintenance assessment. In addition, the Agency undertakes a periodic review of each case every two years.

The Agency measures the number of individual reviews cleared within each of the time bands specified in Agency targets. The Agency does not measures average processing times for cases either within the time bands, or overall.

The 1996–97 target for second tier reviews were;

55% of second tier reviews to be cleared within 13 weeks;

80% of second tier reviews to be cleared within 26 weeks;

and no more than 15% to be older than 26 weeks as at 31 March 1997.

The Agency met all elements of this target and performance was as follows;

66% of second tier reviews cleared within 13 weeks;

88% of second tier reviews to be cleared within 26 weeks;

and 10% that were older than 26 weeks as at 31 March 1997.

The 1996–97 target for change of circumstances were;

Of those change of circumstances cleared

–50% to be cleared within 13 weeks

–60% to be cleared within 26 weeks

Again the Agency met both elements of this target as follows;

Of those change of circumstances cleared

–63% were cleared within 13 weeks

–78% were cleared within 26 weeks.

Even though these targets were exceeded last year, this does not mean that we are complacent in these areas. We will be seeking to ensure that this years performance improves further.

I hope this is helpful.

Ms Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the average length of time taken by the Child Support Agency to complete a maintenance assessment (a) in total and (b) by regional office for each year since the establishment of the agency. [1357]

Mr. Bradley: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Ms Roseanna Cunningham, dated 2 June 1997:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency maintenance assessments.

The Agency does not collect information on average processing times, however, the Agency does have a Secretary of State target to clear 60% of new maintenance applications within 26 weeks, which has been in place for the years 1995/96 and 1996/97.

In 1995/96, the Agency cleared 48% of new applications within 26 weeks; in 1996/97 the performance achieved was 54%. However in the last 2 months of 1996/97 the 60% target was exceeded overall A breakdown of the performance by Child Support Agency Centre is available for 1996/97 and is shown in the attached table.

The intake of child maintenance applications is forecast to increase by 5% this year. Nevertheless, we will maintain this target.

I hope this is helpful.

Ms Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the number and percentage of Child Support Agency cases in which no moneys are being recovered from the absent parent (a) in total, (b) by regional office and (c) by gender of absent parent for each year since the establishment of the agency. [1356]

Mr. Bradley: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Ms Roseanna Cunningham, dated 2 June 1997:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support cases where monies are not being recovered from absent parents (APs).

The information you have requested by region and for all years of Agency operation, is available only at disproportionate cost. I hope the following details will be helpful to you.

The attached table gives information on the current levels of compliance with maintenance assessments at Agency level. The data is taken from a 5% sample of live cases drawn from the child support computer system on the date shown. The Agency does not distinguish absent parents or parents with care by gender.

	Compliance
February 1997	Full compliance	Partial compliance	Nil compliance
Full maintenance assessments
Number of cases	52,200	52,100	61,000
Percentage	31.6	31.5	36.9
Interim maintenance assessments
Number of cases (i)	600	4,000	51,700
Percentage	1.1	7.1	91.8
Number of cases AP paying direct to PWC	97,500	—	—

The above compliance table only includes cases where the Agency collection service is used, and the absent parent (AP) has a full maintenance assessment and payment is via the regular payment account.

Full compliance: All payments due to the regular maintenance accounts have been made and nothing is outstanding.

Partial compliance: Some payment(s) have been made to the regular maintenance accounts during the last 3 months and there is an amount outstanding.

Nil compliance: No payments have been made to the regular maintenance accounts during the last 3 months.

Ms Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the number and percentage of maintenance assessments carried out by the Child Support Agency which are challenged by the absent parent (a) in total and (b) by regional office for each year since the establishment of the agency. [1354]

Mr. Bradley: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Ms Roseanna Cunningham, dated 2 June 1997:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency maintenance assessments.

You have asked about the number of maintenance assessments that are challenged by the absent parent. The Agency records information on the number of applications for a second tier review (STR) received from any party to the assessment. Along with absent parents this includes parents with care, persons (other than parents) with care, and a child in Scotland. The STR is the means by which any of the interested parties can ask for a review of their assessment by another child support officer (CSO) if they disagree with the decision of the original CSO.

The attached tables therefore give the number of STR requests received by the Agency since inception, set against the total number of maintenance assessments made in each year.

I hope this is helpful.

Ms Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the number and percentage of Child Support Agency cases in which an interim assessment exceeded the actual maintenance assessment (a) in total and (b) by regional office for each year since the establishment of the agency. [1358]

Mr. Bradley: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Ms Roseanna Cunningham, dated 2 June 1997:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency interim maintenance assessments (IMAs).

The Agency is unable to answer your question in the format requested, however set out below is an explanation of interim assessments together with the number we have imposed to date. I hope you find this helpful.

An IMA is usually imposed where the absent parent, parent with care or their respective partners do not provide all the information required under Child Support legislation to make a full maintenance assessment (FMA).

One of four different categories of IMA can be imposed depending on the nature of the missing information, ie category A, B, C or D IMA. Category A and D are intended to encourage compliance and will normally always be punitive and higher than the liability under a FMA. A category B may, or may not be punitive depending on the circumstances of the case, it generally will not take account of any new family. A category C IMA is non punitive and is imposed in self employed cases to allow the AP extra time to provide the necessary financial evidence.

Since April 1993 the Agency has imposed over 166,000 IMAs. I do not have break down by category, but the majority of IMAs will be category A where the liability is normally higher than the FMA.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the current relevant levels of VAT levied by hotels in each of the European Union countries in respect of (a) accommodation and (b) food purchase. [1363]

Dawn Primarolo: The VAT rates applied in European Union countries to hotel accommodation and meals are shown in the table.

Customs and Excise (Merger)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to publish the findings of his review on the feasibility of merging Customs and Excise and the Inland Revenue. [1855]

Dawn Primarolo: A programme of closer working (but not merger) between Customs and Excise and Inland Revenue resulted from a review under their Fundamental Expenditure Reviews in 1994 of the boundary between the two departments. We intend to develop further this programme in support of Government objectives.

Interest Rate

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list which of the economic indicators for which his Department receives data he will take into account when assessing interest rate policy. [1872]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 2 June 1997]: The Chancellor has transferred the operational responsibility for setting interest rates to the Bank of England.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer at present levels of economic activity, at what amount interest rates would have to be set to achieve levels of inflation of (a) 2.4 per cent., (b) 2.3 per cent., (c) 2.2 per cent., (d) 2.1 per cent. and (e) 2.0 per cent. by the end of March 1998. [1871]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 2 June 1997]: The mechanisms by which interest rates affect the inflation rate are quantitatively uncertain and may be influenced by unforeseen events reflecting the time lags involved. Therefore it is not possible to be sure about the precise level of interest rates required to hit an exact inflation rate ten months ahead.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his oral statement of 20 May, Official Report, column 508, what are his growth objectives for the British economy for its financial years 1997–98, 1998–99, and 1999–00; and if he will state his employment objectives, (a) numerically and (b) descriptivity, for the same financial years. [1864]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 2 June 1997]: The Government's central economic objectives are high and stable levels of growth and employment. The Government do not intend to set numerical targets for growth and employment.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his oral statement of 20 May, Official Report, column 508, what are the numerical targets of the Government's economic policy for the key indicators to monitor. [1863]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 2 June 1997]: The Chancellor will set out the Government's approach to monetary policy in his Mansion House speech on 12 June. The Government regard price stability as an essential pre-condition for high and stable levels of growth and employment. Sound public finances are also important for lasting economic stability. The Government's fiscal policy will be spelt out in the Budget.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what means he proposes to resolve any incompatibility between the Bank of England's monetary policy objective of price stability and the Government's growth and employment objectives. [1865]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 2 June 1997]: The monetary policy objective of the Bank of England will be to deliver price stability (as defined by the Government's inflation target) and, without prejudice to this objective, to support the Government's economic policy, including their objectives for growth and employment. Price stability is the best way that monetary policy can contribute to achieving high and stable levels of growth and employment in the long run.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his oral statement of 20 May, Official Report, column 509, what is his definition of (a) extreme economic circumstances and (b) a limited period; and if he will make a statement covering both the numerical and descriptive aspects of these matters. [1869]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 2 June 1997]: Further details will be made available when the draft Bill is introduced into the House.

Departmental Advisers

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many advisers employed in his office during his time in opposition are now working with him in the Treasury; what are their names; how old they are; what the terms and conditions are upon which they are now employed; how much salary they are each being paid; if that money is coming from public or private sources; and if he will publish a detailed curriculum vitae for each of the individuals concerned. [1732]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 2 June 1997]: The Prime Minister has approved the appointment of Ed Balls, Charles Whelan, Edward Miliband and Andrew Maugham as paid Special Advisers to HM Treasury.

The terms and conditions for Special Advisers paid from public funds were agreed by the Prime Minister on 19 May in the attachment to his letter to Cabinet colleagues. A copy is being placed in the Library of the House. No salaries for those employed in the Treasury have yet been agreed.

It would not be appropriate for me to publish personal information about the individuals concerned, or to comment on their previous private employment arrangements.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the names of the political and special advisers appointed to his Department since the general election. [1626]

Mrs. Liddell: The Prime Minister has approved the appointment of Ed Balls, Charles Whelan, Edward Miliband and Andrew Maugham as paid Special Advisers to HM Treasury.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many young people under the age of 25 years have been unemployed for over six months in (a) Great Britain, (b) England, (c) Manchester, (d) Trafford and (e) Wythenshawe and Sale East. [1643]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 2 June 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Paul Goggins, dated 3 June 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to reply to your recent question asking how many young people under the age of 25 years have been unemployed for over six months in (a) Great Britain, (b) England, (c) Manchester, (d) Trafford and (e) Wythenshawe and Sale East.

The ONS produces two measures of unemployment. The first, derived from the quarterly Labour Force Survey, is defined on a consistent and internationally recognised basis set out by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and counts as unemployed, people who are: a) without a paid job; b) available to start work within the next two weeks and c) have either looked for work in the past four weeks or are waiting to start a job already obtained.

ONS also publishes the monthly claimant count, which is based on the UK administrative system and includes all people claiming unemployment-related benefits at Employment Service offices on the day of the monthly count, who on that day had signed on as unemployed and available to do any suitable work. All people who attend an Employment Service office to sign are counted, irrespective of whether they are actually receiving benefit.

Both measures are described and compared in the ONS booklet How exactly is Unemployment Measured. Please find a copy enclosed with this reply.

Information on length of time ILO unemployed is generally available from the Labour Force Survey, a quarterly basis down to county, or former county, level. The most recent information available is for autumn 1996. Some information for local authorities is available from the annual LFS Local Area Database (LAD). However, in order to protect confidentiality the database only includes key data items and length of time unemployed is not among them. If it were available the figure for Trafford would be less than the threshold for reliable estimates. No figures less than this threshold can be released. Further information on the Local Area Database is available in the May 1996 edition of Labour Market Trends (pages 239–246) which is available in the House of Commons library. No information about parliamentary constituencies is available from the LFS. The latest available figures are shown in the table below:

	Unadjusted claimant unemployment[1]	ILO unemployed[2]
Great Britain	171,572	246,000

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to revise the method of calculating the unemployment statistics. [1092]

Mrs. Liddell: The Director of the Office for National Statistics is responsible for deciding the form, coverage and timing of release of statistics issued by his Office, taking into account the views of customers. ONS is presently consulting customers on the future presentation of labour market statistics; the consultation exercise was launched through an article in the Labour Market Trends published on 8 May. Comments on the proposals should be sent to ONS by 14 June.

The proposals set out for consultation reflect the House of Commons Employment Select Committee recommendation that more prominence should be given to the measure of unemployment which is based on the internationally agreed ILO definition.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people aged 18 to 24 years who had been unemployed for more than six months found jobs in each of the past five years; how many people in that age group became unemployed for more than six months in each of the past five years; and how many such people on average were unemployed for more than six months in each of the past five years, [1631]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. David Willetts, dated 3 June 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on unemployment of those aged 18 to 24 years.

Please note that information on the destination of leavers from the claimant count is only available since January 1995, therefore this information has only been provided for the last two years. Also, this information only includes those claims that were terminated with a known destination. Approximately 25 per cent. of all terminated claims have an unknown destination.

The results are shown in the attached tables.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many persons aged 18 to 24 years are currently seeking and available for work; [1649]

(2) how many persons aged 18 to 24 years who are currently registered unemployed have never been employed; [1651]

(3) how many persons aged 18 to 24 years are currently registered unemployed; [1647]

(4) how many persons aged 18 to 24 years who are seeking work are also undertaking part or full-time study. [1650]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. James Paice, dated 3 June 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your four recent questions (1647, 1649, 1650 and 1651) about 18 to 24 year olds in the labour market asking how many are: (1) registered unemployed, (2) currently seeking and available for work, (3) registered unemployed who have never been employed (4) seeking work and also undertaking part or full-time study.

The ONS produces two measures of unemployment. The first, derived from the quarterly Labour Force Survey (LFS), is defined on an internationally-recognised consistent basis set out by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and counts as unemployed people who are:

(a) without a paid job;

(b) available to start work within the next two weeks and

(c) have either looked for work in the past four weeks or are waiting to start a job already obtained.

ONS also publishes the monthly claimant count, which is based on the UK administrative system and includes all people claiming unemployed-related benefits at Employment Service offices on the day of the monthly count, who on that day had signed on as unemployed and available to do any suitable work. All people who attend an Employment Service office to sign are counted, irrespective of whether they are actually receiving unemployment-related benefits.

Both measures are described and compared in the ONS booklet How Exactly is Unemployment Measured?, a copy of which is enclosed with this reply. This booklet is also available in the House of Commons Library.

A total of 421,656 18 to 24 year olds were registered unemployed (claimant unemployed) in the UK in April 1997. This compares with an estimate of 551,000 18-24 year olds ILO unemployed according to the autumn 1996 Labour Force Survey. The group you refer to in your first question "currently seeking and available for work" is broadly the same as the ILO definition of unemployment except that this also includes those who are waiting to start a job they have already obtained.

No information is available from the claimant count about those registered unemployed who have never been employed. According to the autumn 1996 Labour Force Survey there were an estimated 179,000 18-24 year olds who were ILO unemployed and had never had a paid job. 38,000 of these were in full-time education and therefore not eligible to claim unemployment related benefits.

An estimated total of 127,000 18-24 year olds not in employment had been seeking work within the past four weeks and undertaking full or part-time study according to the autumn 1996 UK LFS. Of these 95,000 were ILO unemployed (ie seeking and available to start work within the next two weeks or waiting to start a job already obtained). The rest are categorised as economically inactive because they were not available to start work within two weeks. 79,000 out of the above total of 127,000 said that they were looking for part-time work. It may be assumed that many of these would be planning to combine their studies with part-time work, although they cannot be separately identified.

Advanced Corporation Tax

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for meetings with representatives of the Association of Consulting Actuaries about the impact of any changes in advanced corporation tax on pension funds and charities; and if he will make a statement. [1561]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 2 June 1997]: I have no plans to meet representatives of the Association of Consulting Actuaries.

Bank of England

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the reasons for transferring departmental management from the Bank of England to the Treasury; and if he will make a statement illustrating the operational implications and benefits arising from this change. [1874]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 2 June 1997]: The Chancellor's statement granting the Bank of England operational responsibility for setting interest rates means that it is important to separate full policy responsibility for the Government's debt and cash management from monetary policy. The separation is intended to ensure that debt and cash management decisions are taken in such a way as to minimise the cost of financing the Government's borrowing needs subject to risk and are not influenced by short-term monetary policy considerations (and vice versa). The Treasury and the Bank are now engaged in working out the operational details of the transfer.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which other European Community Governments make use of advances from their central banks similar to the ways and means advances to Her Majesty's Government from the Bank of England. [1525]

Mrs. Liddell: No other Government of member states of the European Community operate an overdraft facility with their central bank similar to Ways and Means advances.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the manner in which ways and means advances from the Bank of England to the Government operate. [1531]

Mrs. Liddell: Government borrowing operations are conducted through the National Loans Fund. If the Fund is in surplus, the surplus is deposited with the Banking Department of the Bank of England. If the Fund is in deficit, the deficit is met by borrowing, known as ways and means borrowing, from the Bank's Issue Department. These arrangements enable any differences between the Fund's daily outgoings and its receipts to be offset without formality by changes in the deposit balance or ways and means borrowing.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what factors will be taken into account by the Court of the Bank of England when it reviews the performance of its Monetary Policy Committee; and if he will make a statement. [1867]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 2 June 1997]: In reviewing the performance of the MPC in meeting its monetary policy objective of price stability, the Court will have particular regard to whether the Bank is collecting proper regional and sectoral information. The Court itself is to be reformed to ensure that it is representative of the whole of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the voting decisions of each member of his new monetary policy committee when actions are taken to achieve the Government's inflation target. [1866]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 2 June 1997]: The Monetary Policy Committee meetings will be minuted, and the minutes, including a record of the votes, will be released no later than six weeks after the meeting.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to announce the name of the new Deputy Governor of the Bank of England. [1489]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I will make an announcement in due course.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he defines as short-term gain in terms of the length of time an asset has been held for the purposes of capital gains tax. [1851]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 2 June 1997]: The capital gains tax system does not define short-term gains.

Single Currency

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he intends to become a signatory to the stability pact as part of the preparation for a single currency. [300]

Mr. Gordon Brown: The principles and main elements of the stability and growth pact were agreed by Heads of State and Government at the European Council in Dublin last year. The informal Council of Finance Ministers at Noordjwijk in April gave political agreement to the texts, which have been sent to the European Parliament. The UK has maintained a Parliamentary scrutiny reserve on the stability pact proposals. The intention is that the European Council will endorse the stability pact texts at its meeting in Amsterdam on 16 June, including any amendments since the Noordjwijk ECOFIN, and taking account of the European Parliament's views.

Departmental Computer Systems

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to ensure that his Department's computer systems are millennium compliant; and if he will make a statement. [1253]

Mrs. Liddell: My department has work in progress to identify and test its computer systems to ensure that they will operate correctly at the turn of the century. This work is currently within the model timetable set down by CCTA.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if domestic holidays are included under other recreations in the retail prices index; and if he will publish separate figures for the increase in the price of domestic holidays. [1444]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Austin Mitchell, dated 3 June 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on the inclusion of domestic holidays in the Retail Prices Index.

A price index for domestic holidays has been included in the Retail Prices Index since February 1994 under the published heading of United Kingdom holidays. This was on the recommendation of the 1992 Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee. These figures are given in Table 2 of the monthly Business Monitor MM23—Retail Prices Index a copy of which is in the House of Commons library.

2001 Census

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy that the 2001 Census includes questions relating to levels of income, poverty and wealth. [1543]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mrs. Ann Clwyd, dated 2 June 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as Director of the Office for National Statistics, to your recent Parliamentary question concerning questions about levels of income, poverty and wealth in the 2001 Census.

The Census Offices have been consulting users about the need for questions in the 2001 Census, and a number of new questions are being trialled in the 1997 Census Test which will be held in June. The Test questionnaire includes questions which would provide statistics related to poverty and wealth. In particular, the Test will include a question about banded individual gross income.

The Government will publish their proposals for questions to be included in the Census in a White Paper in mid-1998. These proposals will be based on users' substantial requirements for information, and on evidence gathered in the 1997 Census Test on the public's reaction to the possible questions. The White Paper will invite comment.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what policy objectives underlie the Government's purpose in raising nominal and real exchange rates; and if he will estimate by how much the public sector borrowing requirement increased as a result of the increase in nominal and real exchange rates since 1995. [1528]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government do not have a policy of raising nominal or real exchange rates. The Government want a stable and competitive pound over the medium term, consistent with their objective of price stability. It is impossible to estimate the effects on the PSBR of the exchange rate appreciation since 1995, which will depend on the extent to which a higher exchange rate has affected the level and composition of gross domestic product.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the effect of rises in exchange rates on output and employment in (a) manufacturing industry and (b) the rest of the economy since 1994. [1558]

Mrs. Liddell: There are many factors, in addition to changes in the exchange rate, which can affect output and employment in manufacturing industry and the rest of the economy; and it is difficult to isolate their separate effects. However, the Government are aware that the recent appreciation of sterling is making life difficult for manufacturing industry.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the trade-weighted change in the value of (i) sterling, (ii) the dollar, (iii) the D-mark and (iv) the yen since 1985; and if he will indicate to the latest available date the corresponding changes in (a) the unit cost of labour, (b) producer prices and (c) consumer prices. [1564]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Austin Mitchell, dated 3 June 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on the change in the value of Sterling, the US Dollar, the Deutschemark and the Japanese Yen since 1985; and also about Unit Labour Costs, Producer Prices and Retail Prices.

The information you have requested about exchange rates is published by the Bank of England in Table 26 of their publication Bank of England: Monetary and Financial Statistics. More historic data can be obtained from the publication Bank of England: Statistical Abstract.

The information you have requested about Unit Labour Costs is published by the ONS in table 4.1 of Economic Trends. More historic data can be obtained from the Annual Supplement to Economic Trends.

Producer Prices are also published by the ONS—in table 3.1 of Economic Trends. More historic data can be obtained from the same Annual Supplement referred to above. Information on Retail Prices going back to 1985 is available from table 11 of the ONS Business Monitor MM23—Retail Prices Index.

Copies of all these publications are available in the House of Commons Library.

The data published by the ONS is also available from the ONS Database. This can be accessed via the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment has been made of the effect of the appreciation in the nominal value of the pound between the fourth quarter of 1994 and the second quarter of 1997 on the rate of inflation, manufacturing output and employment. [1550]

Mrs. Liddell: There are many factors, in addition to changes in the nominal value of sterling, which can affect the rate of inflation, manufacturing output and employment; and it is difficult to isolate the separate effects. However, the Government are aware that the recent appreciation of sterling is making life difficult for manufacturing industry.

Audio-visual Goods (Prices)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what percentage the retail price of audio-visual goods has fallen since January 1987; and what has been the market share of British industry in the supply of such goods in the United Kingdom. [1557]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Austin Mitchell, dated 3 June 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent questions on the fall in the retail price of audio-visual goods since January 1987 and the market share of British industry for such goods in the United Kingdom.

The fall in the retail price of audio-visual equipment since January 1987 can be calculated from the ONS database which may be accessed by the House of Commons library.

The market share of British industry in the supply of audio-visual equipment in the United Kingdom is shown in the table below:

Year	Percentage of British market share
1990	30
1991	15
1992	10
1993	20
1994	21
1995	[1]15

Property Costs

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much (a) house prices and (b) the cost of dwelling insurance and ground rent, as measured by the retail prices index, have risen since January 1992; and if he will provide separate figures for dwelling insurance and ground rent. [1529]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Austin Mitchell, dated 3 June 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on how much (a) house prices and (b) the cost of dwelling insurance and ground rent, as measured by the retail price index, have risen since January 1992; and if separate figures for dwelling insurance and ground rent will be provided.

House prices are not published in the retail price index and are obtainable from the Department of the Environment.

Between January 1992 and April 1997 the cost of dwelling insurance and ground rent as measured by the retail price index has fallen by 2.5 per cent. Separate information for the specified categories is not published.

There are no plans to provide separate figures for dwelling insurance and ground rent.

Manufactures

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list on the basis of July to December 1973 = 100, the United Kingdom terms of trade for finished manufactures together with (a) the volume of imports and exports of finished manufactures and (b) the surplus/deficit on trade in manufactures at 1992 prices. [1539]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Austin Mitchell, dated 3 June 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question concerning UK trade in manufactured goods.

The information is not available at 1973 or 1992 prices. However, volumes and information from which terms of trade may be calculated are available, using 1990 as the base year, from the ONS database which may be accessed by the House of Commons Library. Balances of trade in manufactures at current prices are available from the same source.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the Governor of the Bank of England to discuss matters relating to BCCI. [1488]

Mrs. Liddell: The Governor and my right hon. Friend the Chancellor meet from time to time to discuss a range of matters.

Air Passenger Duty

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to expand the number of domestic air services to islands in Scotland exempt from air passenger duty. [1285]

Dawn Primarolo: Decisions on the types of aircraft used for flights to the Scottish islands which affect whether air passenger duty is charged, are purely commercial decisions for the airline operators.

Social Model (Disability)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to adopt a social model of disability in framing all future and amending previous relevant legislation and guidance; and if he will make a statement. [1685]

Mrs. Liddell: Our manifesto commits us to establishing "comprehensive, enforceable civil rights for disabled people against discrimination in society or work, developed in partnership with all interested parties". The Government will be consulting widely and developing proposals in partnership with disability organisations, employers, employers organisations, trade unions and others. It is not appropriate for me to pre-empt the outcome of that consultation.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

ENVIRONMENT AND THE REGIONS

Global Warming

10. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has evaluated into the rise in global temperatures in the current year relative to the 1951 to 1980 average. [453]

Mr. Meacher: Monitoring by the Hadley Centre, supported by my Department, shows that in the first three months of 1997, global surface temperatures were 0.4 degrees Celsius above the 1951 to 1980 average.

Regional Development Agencies

11. Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he proposes to publish proposals to set up English regional development agencies. [454]

Mr. Caborn: We plan to bring forward legislation in the Autumn.

Departmental Responsibilities (Scotland)

12. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what responsibilities he has in Scotland. [455]

Mr. Prescott: My responsibilities are in the main for England. However, I do have a number of responsibilities in Scotland, particularly for transport matters. I have placed further details in the Library of the House.

Pollution

13. Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what actions he plans to take to reduce pollution from low-level ozone. [458]

Mr. Meacher: Ground-level ozone is a serious air pollutant and the Government are committed to eliminating episodes which may damage people's health. The control of ozone levels requires international action and the Government are playing a full and active part in developing ozone reduction strategies in Europe.

Environmental Improvements (West Cumbria)

14. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for schemes of environmental improvement in West Cumbria. [459]

Ms Angela Eagle: Environmental improvements are an important feature in all initiatives supported by the Departments of the Environment and Transport.

Area Cost Adjustment

15. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to amend the area cost adjustment element of the local government SSA formula. [460]

Ms Armstrong: We have commissioned research on the area cost adjustment in consultation with the Local Government Association.

Oxfordshire County Council

17. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the request by Oxfordshire county council to be designated to operate at a level above cap. [462]

Mr. Raynsford: Oxfordshire County Council was designated for capping on 22 May. The proposed cap requires the authority to reduce its budget requirement by £6 million.

Housing (Chester)

18. Ms Christine Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what impact the Government's proposals to phase release of capital receipts will have on the availability of affordable housing units in City of Chester. [463]

Ms Armstrong: We will ensure that resources released under the Capital Receipts Initiative are made available to local authorities to use in support of priority schemes which meet key objectives. We will be considering and consulting on objectives and the distribution of additional spending over the coming weeks. It will be for local authorities to decide how to use any resources within the general objectives set.

Water Disconnections

19. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his policy towards water disconnections to domestic properties. [464]

Mr. Prescott: At the "Water Summit" on 19 May, we announced the Government's intention to review the system of charging for water. That review will include the water companies' debt recovery arrangements, including disconnection.

Derelict Land

20. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will establish a central register of derelict land. [465]

Ms Angela Eagle: A survey of derelict land in England was carried out in 1993 and published in 1995. My Department is currently exploring the possibility of establishing a national land use information system, which would include information on derelict land.

Poverty

21. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to reduce poverty in the English regions. [466]

Mr. Caborn: Reducing poverty across the nation is one of the Government's key policy objectives. Our policies for the regions are aimed at tackling the root causes of deprivation and promoting economic growth. New regional development agencies will provide the means of securing effective, properly co-ordinated action at the regional and sub-regional level, to underpin our wider economic and social agenda.

Air Pollution

22. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he proposes to take to reduce air pollution from the burning of fossil fuels. [467]

Mr. Meacher: The Government are committed to tackling global warming, acid rain and ambient air pollution by reducing emissions from the burning of fossils fuels. We are examining options for policies and measurers, their costs and other consequences, which will enable us to meet our challenging manifesto commitment to reduce carbon dioxide emissions to 20 per cent. below 1990 levels by 2010. Strategies to achieve these goals will include the development of an integrated transport system, and the promotion of energy efficiency and renewable energy sources.

In this context the Government are considering carefully the proposals in the European Commission's draft Acidification strategy for strict new targets for emissions of sulphur dioxide, nitrogen oxides and ammonia and those in the proposed Auto Oil Directives for proposed fuel and vehicle standards.

Housebuilding

23. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to expand housebuilding. [468]

Ms Armstrong: The Government's Capital Receipts initiative will support the priority schemes of local authorities which meet key objectives. It will be for local authorities to decide how to use any resources within the general objectives set.

Capital Receipts

24. Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his Department's policy in respect of the control of the capital receipts by debt-free local authorities. [469]

Mr. Raynsford: Debt-free local authorities have the freedom to reinvest capital receipts from the sale of their assets, according to their own priorities.

Opencast Mining

25. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to carry out a review of MPG3; and what plans he has to enhance the role of local communities in the granting of permission for opencasting. [470]

Mr. Caborn: I refer my hon. Friend to the response I gave in an Adjournment Debate on this issue on Monday 19 May, Official Report, columns 483-88. I have asked my officials to prepare urgently a plan of action to review the present stance of MPG3 on opencast coal.

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the oral statement by the Minister of state on 19 May, Official Report, column 488, if he will set out the timetable for the departmental plan of action relating to opencast coal mining; and how he plans to deal with planning appeals currently outstanding. [1211]

Mr. Raynsford: My officials are currently preparing a plan of action as a matter of urgency. Any outstanding appeals will be determined in accordance with the development plan for the area unless material considerations indicate otherwise.

Household Waste

26. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will undertake discussions with Lancashire county council about proposals to tip household waste in Round "O" Quarry, West Lancashire. [471]

Mr. Meacher: It would not be appropriate for me to discuss the plans for Round "O" Quarry with Lancashire County Council at this stage. Proposals relating to the quarry are contained within the draft Lancashire Minerals and Waste Local Plan, which will be the subject of a public inquiry next year. The inquiry will provide objectors and supporters with an opportunity to put their views to the Inspector.

Household Growth

27. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on trends in household growth. [472]

Mr. Raynsford: The latest household projections for England were published in March 1995. The projections showed an increase of 4.4 million households from 1991 to 2016. Since these projections were published they have been subjected to considerable public scrutiny and are generally regarded as the best assessment that can be made with the currently available information. We are currently considering the responses to last November's Green Paper on the implications of the latest figures.

London Government

28. Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the timetable for the introduction of a strategic authority and mayor in London. [473]

Mr. Prescott: Subject to a referendum and the necessary legislation being enacted by Parliament, I expect that the new mayor and authority will be elected in May 2000.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to set up, support and fund an all party organisation to campaign in favour of a yes vote in respect of a referendum on proposals to set up a strategic authority for London; and if he will make a statement. [1498]

Mr. Raynsford: None. We are intending to issue a consultations paper on the establishment of a directly elected mayor and strategic authority in London by the end of July. We will subsequently introduce legislation to make provision for a referendum in London on this matter and subject to parliamentary approval it is our intention to hold the referendum in May 1998.

Departmental Appointments

Mr. Heseltine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many appointments to his Department he has approved since 2 May; and if he will list them, setting out their responsibilities and stating their remuneration. [1091]

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the number of political appointments made in the departments for which he is accountable. [1502]

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the names of the political and special advisers who have been appointed to his Department since the General Election. [1745]

Mr. Prescott: With the Prime Minister's approval, we have appointed 2 Special Advisers, Joe Irvin acts as my Special Adviser and Kate Davies acts as Special Adviser to the Minister for Transport.

Salaries for the Special Advisers are being negotiated individually in relation to their previous earnings, within a pay range which is presently £24,349 rising to £73,484. Progression up the range will be entirely performance related. Pension contributions are also paid in addition to salary.

David Taylor, who is on temporary leave of absence from Lancashire Enterprises plc, is acting as an unpaid Special Adviser for a limited period.

Housing Stock Transfers

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what plans he has to issue advice to local authorities that are in the process of considering the large scale voluntary transfer of their housing stock, pending the Government's review of the law; and if he will make a statement; [1270]

(2) what plans he has to review the law regarding the large scale voluntary transfer of housing stock; and if he will make a statement. [1271]

Mr. Raynsford: We are reviewing the policy on housing stock transfers. We are aiming to issue revised procedural guidance for housing transfers in the near future. My officials provide advice and guidance on housing transfers through their regular contact with local authorities.

Departmental Computer Systems

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to ensure that his Department's computer systems are millennium compliant; and if he will make a statement. [1250]

Mr. Prescott: DOE, DOT and their Executive Agencies have projects underway to tackle the problem. Both departments are undertaking system audits and holding discussions with product and service providers to analyse the problem in detail in order to produce costed plans by October 1997. The audits of many major systems are complete and some corrective work has been done. In some cases systems are being replaced with compliant ones before 2000.

Household Projections

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when his Department's housing statistics division will have prepared household projections for 1996 and 1997 for local authority areas in Tyne and Wear on the same basis as the OPCS household projections; and if he will publish both sets of figures. [1330]

Mr. Raynsford: OPCS (now the Office for National Statistics) does not produce household estimates and projections which are the responsibility of my Department. These estimates and projections are, however, based, inter alia, on Office for National Statistics population estimates and projections. The latest household projections for mid-1996 for the five metropolitan districts of Tyne and Wear were published in March 1995 in "Projections of Households in England to 2016", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. These were compiled from the OPCS 1992-based sub-national population projections. Household projections were not produced for 1997. Planning has started for the next set of household projections, which will be based on 1996 sub-national population projections that the Office for National Statistics expects to complete in late 1998. The associated 1996-based household projections should be available a few months afterwards.

The Department also produces annual estimates of the number of households by local authority area. The latest estimates are for 1995 and the details for the Tyne and Wear area are as follows:

	Number
Gateshead	86,000
Newcastle upon Tyne	121,000
North Tyneside	84,000
South Tyneside	66,000
Sunderland	120,000

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to receive the results of the research and reviews of the robustness of future household projections; and if he intends to make those results available to the House. [1342]

Mr. Raynsford: The most recent household projections have been subject to considerable public scrutiny since their publication in March 1995, in particular by the Environment Select Committee in evidence for its report on Housing Need in 1996. Whilst generally endorsing the projections, the Committee recommended that the Department continues to examine the extent to which household formation is affected by economic and social factors. This is currently being addressed by the Department of Applied Economics, Cambridge University, as part of a wider research project for the Department on the modelling of the need for social housing. The project has been extended beyond its original completion date and should now be finalised by the Autumn.

Last year, the Department also commissioned Heriot-Watt University to undertake a detailed literature review on household formation, with particular emphasis on evaluating the available evidence on the extent to which economic factors affect the propensity for new households to form. This work has recently been completed, and I expect to see the results shortly.

As is the usual practice with external research commissioned by the Department, I would expect reports to be published as soon as practicable.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research he has evaluated into the impact of international passenger survey statistics, and large student populations, on household projections; and what conclusions he has reached. [1340]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department has undertaken no research as such on the impact of the International Passenger Survey statistics on the household projections. Projections of the future pattern of migration between England and the rest of the world are the responsibility of the Government Actuary's Department (GAD). In collaboration with other departments, GAD undertook a thorough review in 1992 of the methods used to set international migration assumptions. This led to a new methodology which was used for the first time in the preparation of the 1991-based national population projections. As with previous projections, the assumed level of migration over the projection period takes into account information from a run of previous years in order to even out the fluctuations from year to year. The robustness of sources of information on migration, including the International Passenger Survey, is kept under regular review by the Office for National Statistics.

We are currently investigating the effects of large student populations on the household projections. However, any proposals for revisions to the methodology for handling students in the underlying sub-national population projections will need to be discussed with the Office for National Statistics before they can be implemented.

Departmental Merger

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what savings he will make by merging the Department of Transport and the Department of Environment. [1501]

Mr. Prescott: I have been appointed Secretary of State to the two Departments. My priority is to realise the opportunities which will arise in areas of overlapping responsibilities. If organisational changes are necessary to maximise these benefits I will consider them, but they are not my starting point.

Government Offices

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to alter the structure of the Government Offices for the regions. [1813]

Mr. Caborn: My right hon. Friends the President of the Board of Trade and the Secretary of State for Education and Employment share with this Department responsibility for the Government Offices in the English regions. The network of Offices has an important part to play in advancing and implementing our policies, and we have no plans to change its structure.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review SSAs. [456]

Ms Armstrong: We are reviewing SSAs in consultation with the Local Government Association.

TRANSPORT

Gospel Oak to Barking Line

39. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on service levels on the Gospel Oak to Barking line. [485]

Dr. Strang: Key services for the Gospel Oak to Barking line have been specified in the passenger service requirement for North London Railways, the operator of services on the branch.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent representations he has received regarding services on the Gospel Oak to Barking Line. [482]

Dr. Strang: I have received no representations regarding these services.

A34

40. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will assess the advantages of resurfacing of the A34 between Wendlebury and Peartree roundabout. [486]

Dr. Strang: I am advised that the surface of the A34 between Wendlebury and Peartree roundabout remains in good condition.

Leeds Supertram

41. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if his Department will review the contribution from public funds towards the Leeds supertram scheme. [487]

Mr. Prescott: I shall consider carefully any application West Yorkshire passenger transport authority makes for support for funding for Leeds supertram.

Manchester Airport

42. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the expansion of Manchester airport. [488]

Mr. Prescott: The Government believe that the expansion of regional airports such as Manchester can make an important contribution to regional development and employment, but the environmental impact of particular proposals must be carefully weighed against their benefits.

Cycling

43. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to encourage cycling in urban areas. [489]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We will support the objectives of the National Cycling Strategy and the aim of a fourfold increase in cycling by 2012, as part of an integrated transport policy.

We shall be encouraging local authorities and others to improve conditions for cycling, particularly on urban roads. This will be done through the publication of information on good practice and through dialogue with the providers. We intend to play a full part in the National Cycling Forum, which has been set up to co-ordinate delivery of the strategy.

London Underground

44. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how he plans to encourage greater private sector investment in London Underground. [490]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are developing a new public/private partnership to improve the London Underground, safeguard its commitment to the public interest and guarantee value for money to taxpayers and passengers. To this end my hon. Friend the Paymaster General is currently carrying out an urgent review of the Private Finance Initiative to see how it can be made to work better.

Rail Regulator

45. Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has for meeting the Rail Regulator to discuss penalties for non-delivery of services. [491]

50. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the powers of the Rail Regulator. [496]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have already met the Rail Regulator and made clear our view that the regulation of the rail industry, and the sanctions available to the regulator and the Franchising Director, need to be strengthened.

We are conducting a thorough review of rail regulation to identify exactly what improvements need to be made.

Transport Infrastructure Development

46. Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are his priorities for transport infrastructure development within the Thames Gateway region. [492]

Mr. Prescott: Our manifesto for London "Because London Deserves Better", recognised the need for modern transport links to enhance accessibility, and support regeneration within the Thames Gateway; we are currently studying options and priorities.

London Transport Policy

47. Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to visit Dalston Kingsland station to discuss a London transport policy. [493]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Neither my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions nor I have arranged to visit Dalston Kingsland station to discuss a London transport policy, but I should be willing to consider such an invitation.

Extended Franchises

48. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to refuse the applications by Stagecoach and others for extended franchises. [494]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Franchising Director has no powers under the Railways Act 1993 to extend franchises unless provision was made for this in the original franchise agreement or he is directed by the Secretary of State. There is no such provision in the South West Trains franchise agreement, and there are no plans to direct the Franchising Director to extend this or any other franchise.

Rail Electrification

49. Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has for expediting electrification and improvement of the railway between Holyhead and London along the north Wales coast. [495]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government have no plans for the electrification of the Crewe to Holyhead line but Railtrack are also taking forward a strategy for improvements on the Crewe to Bangor section of the North Wales Coast line which will increase line speeds to 100 mph and are progressing the modernisation and upgrade of the West Coast Main Line, which the North Wales line links into at Crewe.

Roads Programme

51. Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the roads programme. [497]

Dr. Strang: We intend to discharge our manifesto commitment to carry out a strategic review of the trunk roads programme.

A36

52. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for improving the A36 road through West Wellow. [498]

Dr. Strang: The second phase of a traffic calming scheme on the A36 at West Wellow will be completed this year. Design work for a third phase to provide a roundabout at Whinwhistle road is under way.

Channel Tunnel (Safety)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what action the channel tunnel safety authority proposes to take against Eurotunnel following the publication of its investigation into the channel tunnel fire; [8]

(2) what action the channel tunnel safety authority proposes to take to ensure that Eurotunnel carry out the recommendations in the report into the channel tunnel fire; and what sanctions are available to the Authority in the event of Eurotunnel failing to carry out recommendations; [58]

(3) what time scale has been given by the channel tunnel safety authority to Eurotunnel for implementing each of the recommendations in its report into the channel tunnel fire. [57]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The channel tunnel safety authority made it clear in its report into the channel tunnel fire that it expected its recommendations to be taken into account at the highest level within Eurotunnel. My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister made the same point when he discussed the report with the company's Co-Chairmen. The majority of the recommendations were implemented before approval was given to the restart of HGV services and, as a pre-condition to that approval, the Intergovernmental Commission required Eurotunnel to provide a timetable, satisfactory to the safety authority, for the implementation of the remaining recommendations. The safety authority will continue to monitor implementation through the action of its specialist working groups, appointed safety inspectors and at its regular meetings with Eurotunnel.

The Intergovernmental Commission has wide supervisory functions under the Treaty of Canterbury to issue directions to Eurotunnel to comply with recommendations from the safety authority.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the extent to which Eurotunnel is fulfilling its safety obligations in relation to the operation of (a) the Shuttle and (b) Eurostar services. [6]

Ms Jackson: Eurotunnel are required to comply with national and international laws including those relating to safe operation. It is their responsibility to ensure compliance or they face possible prosecution by national authorities or action by the intergovernmental commission on behalf of both Governments.

Eurotunnel's organisation includes a health safety and quality directorate whose work includes internal audit to ensure compliance with safety regulations.

The Governments have also appointed the channel tunnel safety authority to advise and assist the intergovernmental commission on all matters affecting safety in the construction and operation of the fixed link.

The safety authority monitors Eurotunnel's shuttle operations and Eurostar services throughout the channel tunnel from detailed incidents reports and regular operational reports from Eurotunnel; from regular reports of inspections from safety authority appointed inspectors; from examination of detailed reports from its specialist working groups on investigations into incidents; from reports on the outcome of safety exercises; and through regular meetings with Eurotunnel.

Road Repairs

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the regions if he will place in the Library a list of the roads his Department assesses to be most in need of repair. [1]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Highways Agency prepares an annual programme of capital maintenance works on sections of Trunk Roads, intended to be the most cost effective way of maintaining the Trunk Road network as a whole. At the moment, the Highways Agency plans major roads capital maintenance projects for 1997–98 ont eh following sections of roads:

M1: J25–J26
M5: J14–J15
M5/M6: Ray Hall interchange
M6: J14–J15
M23: J8–J9
M25: J23–24
M27: J8–J10
M42: J3–3A
M42: J7A–J8
M53: J9–J10
M62: J11–J12
A249: Westminster–Sheerness

This is in addition to capital maintenance carried out by DBFO operators. Comparable information for local roads is not available. These roads are the responsibility of local highway authorities.

A6(M) (Stockport)

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the revised design for the A6 (M) route in the Stockport Metropolitan Borough area has been completed; and if he will make a statement. [1555]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We will shortly be taking forward a strategic review of the trunk road programme, and expect that this scheme will be included within that review. It is clear however that as a result of the continuing examination to which individual schemes are subjected that there is a need for modification of this particular scheme. The details of any such changes are still to be considered.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the impact of reducing the sulphur content of petrol and diesel on vehicle emissions of pollutants. [1879]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department has not commissioned any research specifically aimed at determining the impact of the sulphur content of fuel on vehicle emissions since a number of studies have been carried out by a range of organisations that already enable assessments to be made. A comprehensive study was carried out by the European automotive and oil industries as an element of the Auto-Oil study undertaken by the European Commission. This has lead to proposals for tighter fuel quality and vehicle emissions standards to come into effect from the year 2000. The studies show that sulphur can have an adverse effect on vehicle pollutants arising primarily through its detrimental effect on catalyst efficiency. For petrol vehicles fitted with catalytic convertors reductions in CO, HC and NOx can be achieved when using reduced sulphur fuels. For diesel vehicles, reduced sulphur fuel can lead to a reduction in particulate emissions, but the effect is enhanced in vehicles fitted with catalysts by reducing sulphate formation within the catalyst.

Ferry Subsidies

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the subsidies currently provided by his Department to each of the United Kingdom's island communities in respect of their ferry services. [1769]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions does not currently provide subsidies for ferry services to island communities.

A359 to A303 (Sparkford)

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what priority his Department affords the proposed A359 to A303 slip road at Sparkford; and when he expects construction to begin. [1565]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The A359 to A303 westbound slip road and connection is to be progressed as a Regional improvement and part of the Highways Agency's Network Enhancement Programme. It will be subject to the normal statutory procedures, including a public inquiry if there are objections to the draft Orders.

HEALTH

Departmental Publications

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by what means his Department makes available its publications in (a) Braille, (b) audio tape and (c) large print; and how this is publicised. [1671]

Mr. Boateng: Publications for those with special needs, including people who are sensorily impaired, are generally distributed through agencies that have regular contact with such people. The Department sends mail shot samples and bulk orders on demand to these specialist agencies.

This is backed up by distributions via public libraries, Citizen's Advice Bureaux and other advice centres, local authorities and patient waiting areas in family doctor surgeries and hospitals.

Where an advertising campaign is associated with the topic concerned, the special versions of a publication may be offered through press advertisements. The publications are also available via the Department's literature response lines.

The Department is in the process of building its own direct mail database which will allow precise targeting of agencies and individuals who will act as channels through which this kind of information can be passed to the end user.

The Department's Internet site is being used increasingly to publicise the existence of its publications, including those for people with special needs, and additional publicity routes, such as public information kiosks, are currently being investigated.

Examples of the types of publication available are given in the following list:

General Osteopathic Council

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he took to comply with the consultation requirement of the Osteopaths Act 1993 in respect of the nomination of the General Osteopathic Council; [1836]

(2) for what reason principals and vice-principals of osteopathic training institutions are excluded from membership of the General Osteopathic Council; and when the decision was made to exclude them; [1837]

(3) if directors of companies engaged in the registration and training of osteopaths are excluded from membership of the General Osteopathic Council; and if he will make a statement. [1838]

Ms Jowell: The nominations exercise leading to the appointments of the Chairman and members of the first General Osteopathic Council was conducted by the previous administration.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the Chairman of the General Osteopathic Council is a lay member; and if he will make a statement. [1776]

Ms Jowell: The Chairman of the General Osteopathic Council, Mr. Simon Fielding OBE, is one of the eight lay members of the Council. Under the transitional provisions of the Osteopaths Act 1993, a lay member of the initial Council is defined as 'a person not appearing to the Privy Council to be a practising osteopath'. Although originally qualified as an osteopath, Mr. Fielding has not been able to practise as an osteopath since September 1988, as a result of injuries sustained in a violent assault. Under the transitional provisions described above, he therefore qualified for appointment as lay member of the Council.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding the composition of the General Osteopathic Council. [1834]

Ms Jowell: We have received several letters of support from osteopathic organisations for the Chairman and members of the new General Osteopathic Council, and expressing appreciation of their work towards full implementation of the Osteopaths Act.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to make the General Osteopathic Council more representative of the profession. [1835]

Ms Jowell: The Osteopaths Act 1993 makes provision for 12 osteopathic members on the General Osteopathic Council. Arrangements to fill the current vacancy in the osteopathic membership of the Council will be commenced shortly.

Neurological Damage

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the link between the E4 gene and increased risk of neurological damage; and if he will make a statement. [2116]

Mr. Boateng: The APO E4 allelle is associated with an increased risk of Alzheimer's disease. However, this risk is not absolute with only half of those with Alzheimer's disease having E4 and not everyone with E4 developing Alzheimer's. APO E4 is not the only risk factor associated with the disease. There is considerable medical research ongoing in this field including work sponsored by the Medical Research Council which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Trade and Industry.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the key business targets for the Medicines Control Agency for 1997–98. [2255]

Ms Jowell: We have today placed a copy of the 1997–98 key business targets of the Medicines Control Agency in the Library. We shall, of course, be reviewing the Agency's plans and targets for the longer-term.

Prisoners (HIV/AIDS)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what combination therapies are available for prisoners being treated for HIV/AIDS. [1155]

Ms Jowell: The issue of which therapies to prescribe in combination for individuals with HIV/AIDS is a matter for the treating clinician in consultation with the patient, and taking into account clinical circumstances. Clinical Guidelines outlining the circumstances in which combination therapies would be suitable have recently been published. They are "The British HIV Association Guidelines for Antiretroviral Treatment of HIV Seropositive Individuals", and "The PACT (National Association of Providers of AIDS Care and Treatment) Framework for Antiretroviral Therapy," copies of which are available in the Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

European Convention on Human Rights

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those areas of the European convention on human rights which he proposes to incorporate into UK law; and if he will make a statement. [1580]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We propose to incorporate all the rights and freedoms guaranteed under the convention and the First Protocol to it. Some of the provisions in the Convention, such as those relating to the composition of the European Court of Human Rights, are purely procedural and therefore of no domestic relevance.

Assisted Prison Visits

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was his Department's total expenditure on assisted prison visits for people in receipt of specified benefits for the latest year for which figures are available; how many individuals were assisted by such payments; and if he will make a statement. [1569]

Ms Joyce Quin: The total cost of assisted visits to prisons in England and Wales for 1996–97 was £3,824,324.

It is not possible to specify the actual number of individuals who received assistance. The Assisted Prisons Visits Unit computer system records only the number of claims forms received and paid (or rejected) but a person eligible for payment under the scheme is entitled to a maximum of 26 assisted prison visits each year.

Huntingdon Life Sciences

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many visits were made between September and November 1996 by the Named Veterinary Surgeon appointed under section 6(5)(b) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 to monitor the welfare of the beagle dogs kept in the Dog Toxicology Unit at Huntingdon Life Sciences; [1761]

(2) on how many occasions between September and November 1996 the named day-to-day care person appointed under section 6(5) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 to be responsible for the welfare of the protected animals being held in the Dog Toxicology Unit at Huntingdon Life Sciences, notified personal licence holders that they were concerned for the health or welfare of an animal, in accordance with the procedure laid down in section 6(6)(a) of the Act. [1762]

Mr. George Howarth: These figures are not recorded.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the project licences issued under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 which are currently valid at Huntingdon Life Sciences cover procedures classified as being of (a) mild, (b) moderate and (c) substantial severity. [1765]

Mr. Howarth: Nineteen of the current licences are rated as mild, 27 as moderate and two as substantial. The classification of individual procedures is not recorded on the central database.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the project licences issued under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 to carry out scientific procedures at Huntingdon Life Sciences were subject to the scrutiny of the Animal Procedures Committee. [1763]

Mr. Howarth: Two of the current licences were considered by the Animal Procedures Committee prior to granting.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the project licences authorising the carrying-out of scientific procedures at Huntingdon Life Sciences have been issued under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. [1764]

Mr. Howarth: There are currently 48 project licences issued under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 at that establishment.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions between September and November 1996 the Home Office Inspectorate visited Huntingdon Life Sciences, under section 18(2) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986; how many of these visits were to monitor scientific procedures in the Dog Toxicology Unit; what reports were made to him in accordance with section 18(2)(e); and how many animals were considered to be undergoing excessive suffering and dealt with in accordance with the procedure laid down in section 18(3) of the Act following these visits. [1760]

Mr. Howarth: Six inspectorate visits were made to the establishment in that period. Dog Toxicology Units were visited on three occasions; on two of these, the performance of regulated procedures was observed. One visit involved two Inspectors.

Reports on each of these visits were produced and forwarded to the Chief Inspector.

No excessive suffering, requiring animals to be put down, was observed.

Dogs (Scientific Procedures)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what grounds an exemption was granted under section 10(3) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 to allow the use of non-purpose bred dogs in scientific procedures in 1995. [1740]

Mr. George Howarth: The grounds were that suitable dogs were not available from designated sources.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the source and breed of the 66 non-purpose bred dogs acquired from non-designated sources in the United Kingdom used in scientific procedures in 1995. [1741]

Mr. Howarth: The dogs were provided by their owners who gave informed consent. A range of crossbred and pedigree animals was used.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what means his Department makes available its publications in (a) Braille, (b) audio tape and (c) large print; and how this is publicised. [1683]

Mr. Straw: For all publications, consideration is given at an early stage to the needs of the blind and partially sighted.

My Department has produced the fire safety publication 'Fire Safety in the Home' in Braille, on audio tape and in large print. These are publicised in a catalogue made available to all fire brigades in England and Wales which can order supplies for free distribution to the public. Copies have also been supplied to the Royal National Institute for the Blind for distribution on request.

Audio cassette versions of 'Your Practical Guide to Crime Prevention' and 'Domestic Violence—Don't Stand For It' have been produced. These are publicised in a catalogue sent to all Crime Prevention Officers in England and Wales, through whom copies are made freely available to the public.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many inspections were carried out by his Department's inspectors under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 at each of the Ministry of Defence establishments conducting animal experiments under the Act in each year since 1993. [1877]

Mr. George Howarth: Two Ministry of Defence establishments are designated under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. In each respective year since 1993, the Inspectorate has carried out three, two, six and five visits to one establishment and seven, six, 13 and 13 to the other. In the first five months of 1997, one and four visits (respectively) have been carried out.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances reports arising from Home Office inspections under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 are available to the public. [1878]

Mr. Howarth: The role of the Inspectorate is to advise the Secretary of State. Section 24 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 prohibits the publication of any information which has been given in confidence. Reports from visits of inspection are not therefore made public.

PRIME MINISTER

National Competitiveness

11. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he will be taking to improve national competitiveness. [557]

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend, the President of the Board of Trade, has set out today our plans for a competitive economy.

1. We will ensure that our workforce is equipped with the skills necessary in a modern, competitive economy.
2. We will reform Britain's competition laws because we know more competitive markets are a spur to firms to become more competitive.
3. We will cut unnecessary "red tape" and simplify government to reduce burdens on business.
4. We will legislate on late payment because we know late payment hurts small firms and thriving small firms will be the foundation of a more competitive Britain.
5. We will set a deadline for the completion of Europe's Single Market, clearing away trade barriers and unfair state aids, to give Britain's business access to the world's largest market.

British Telecom

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 21 May, Official Report, column 706, if his words mean that no one on his behalf gave an indication that British Telecom would not be included in the windfall tax. [1707]

The Prime Minister: No undertakings have been given to any individual company.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

United Nations (Dues in Arrears)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries which are currently in arrears with their dues to the United Nations; and if he will make a statement. [1883]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: On 30 April 1997, 79 Member States owed assessed contributions for prior years to the UN regular budget. These Member States are listed below. We urge all Member States to follow the UK example and pay their UN dues promptly and in full, in accordance with their legal obligation to do so.

Member States with outstanding contributions for prior years to the UN regular budget at 30 April 1997

Afghanistan
Angola
Antigua and Barbuda

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Competitiveness

Mr. Casale: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on her plans to promote competitiveness. [2121]

Mrs. Beckett: As a first step, I intend to publish an audit of the UK's competitiveness to provide an objective benchmark of how well the UK is performing in every factor of competitiveness.

This will be followed by a period of extensive consultation with people who play a leading role in business, beginning with a Competitiveness Summit in July.

I am also setting up an Advisory Group on competitiveness, which I will chair and which will comprise leading business figures, people from small firms and representatives of the workforce. This Group will be assisted by a number of working groups which will examine specific aspects of competitiveness. Its remit will be to report to me on all aspects of the competitiveness agenda, including giving advice on policy development for a White Paper on Competitiveness to be published early next year.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will publish the representations she has received from the small business sector regarding the implications of a statutory national minimum wage; and if she will make a statement. [846]

Mr. Ian McCartney: A majority of members at the annual conference of the Federation of Small Businesses recently voted for a motion in support of the National Minimum Wage. The independent Low Pay Commission will undertake a wide ranging consultation exercise seeking the views of employers, including small businesses, on the National Minimum Wage and related issues.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will use the Treasury model to estimate the impact on employment of the introduction of a statutory national minimum wage at (a) £4.00 per hour, (b) £4.25 per hour and (c) £4.60 per hour; and if she will make a statement. [845]

Mr. McCartney: We will ask the independent Low Pay Commission, before it reaches a recommendation on the level at which the National Minimum Wage might be set, to take into account all the economic circumstances, including its likely impact. Any model will be sensitive to the assumptions put into it and I will not speculate about the possible effects of hypothetical levels before the Commission has had a chance to consider the issues.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to advise the Low Pay Commission to consider a regional element to the minimum wage; and if she will make a statement. [1278]

Mr. McCartney [holding answer 3 June 1997]: The Government has made clear its intention to introduce a National Minimum Wage.

ECGD

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the amounts of ECGD exposure in each member country of the present Gulf Co-operation Council in each year since 1983. [1344]

Mrs. Roche: ECGD is currently in the process of migrating its business database to a new computer system and for this reason exposure figures can be provided immediately for the last two years only:

Amounts at risk

	31 March 1996	31 March 1997
Saudi Arabia	976	976
UAE	270	148
Bahrain	179	167
Qatar	362	544
Kuwait	509	348

I shall write to my hon. Friend with fuller details next month and place a copy of that letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the total outstanding sum of ECGD (a) exposure and (b) amounts (i) recovered, (ii) not recovered, (iii) written off and (iv) rescheduled in each year since 1987–88 for (A) Iraq, (B) Jordan and (C) Nigeria. [1343]

Mrs. Roche: ECGD is currently in the process of migrating its business database to a new computer system and for this reason I am not immediately in a position to provide the details my hon. Friend has requested.

These details will be available next month and I will write to my hon. Friend with them as soon as possible thereafter and place a copy in the Library of the House.

TREASURY

Retail Prices Index (Scotland)

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will produce a retail prices index for Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [1581]

Mrs. Liddell: There are no plans to produce an RPI for Scotland.

Windfall tax

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consider imposing a windfall tax when Green Belt land is rezoned for development; and if he will make a statement about the removal of incentives for the owners of such land to seek such rezoning. [1888]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: It would not be appropriate to comment on any possible tax changes during the run up to the Budget.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the implications of the United States/United Kingdom Tax Treaty and Totalisator Agreement on the payment of a windfall tax by United States entities; with which other countries similar agreements exist; and if he will make a statement. [1736]

Mr. Robinson: The treatment under the United States/United Kingdom Tax Treaty and Totalisation Agreement of a windfall tax paid by United Kingdom companies can be determined only when the details of the tax are announced and can be considered by the United States authorities. The United Kingdom has similar tax treaties with around 100 other countries worldwide. I understand that the Totalisation Agreement concerns social security matters which do not appear relevant to a windfall tax.

No. 11 Downing Street (Catering)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy in respect of the contractual arrangements for catering for No. 11 Downing Street. [1468]

Mr. Gordon Brown: There are no contractual arrangements for catering at No. 11, as the choice of caterers used is a matter of personal preference. Those used at official functions are security cleared and chosen by officials. Organisers of non-official functions are also strongly advised to use caterers with security clearance.

Fuel (VAT)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the estimated average savings per week produced by the reduction in VAT on domestic fuel from 8 per cent. to 5 per cent. for (a) the average household, (b) those in the lowest decile of income distribution, (c) those in the highest decile of income distribution and (d) old age pensioners. [1880]

Ms Primarolo: A reduction in VAT on domestic fuel and power from 8 per cent. to 5 per cent. would result in estimated savings in 1997–98 of about:

35p per week for the average household; and

35p and 40p per week for those in the lowest and highest deciles respectively. The deciles are based on net income adjusted for household size.

30p per week for households with a pensioner head.

Additional Voluntary Contributions

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to allow the holders of additional voluntary contributions to delay receiving their annuity from additional voluntary contributions beyond their retirement; and if he will make a statement. [1802]

Ms Primarolo: The payment of benefit from additional voluntary contributions is under review.

Political and Personal Appointments

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many political and personal appointments he has made; and at what cost to public funds. [1116]

Mr. Gordon Brown: Treasury Ministers have appointed four Special Advisers to be paid from public funds. No salaries have yet been agreed. I will write to the right hon. and learned Member with information about the cost to public funds at a later date.

Interest Rates

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which lead indicators the Treasury evaluated in March 1997 in determining whether interest rates should be eased, tightened or remain the same. [1873]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 2 June 1997]: The minutes of the Monthly Monetary Meeting held on 5 March between the previous Chancellor and the Governor of the Bank of England were published on 23 April 1997.

Monetary Policy

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his oral statement of 20 May, Official Report, column 508, (1) what is his definition (a) descriptively and (b) numerically of price stability; [1861]

(2) over what time scale the Bank of England will be expected to achieve new inflation targets when they are set. [1870]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 2 June 1997]: The Chancellor will set out the Government's approach to monetary policy in his Mansion House speech on 12 June.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his oral statement of 20 May, Official Report, column 508, what factors could prejudice the Bank of England's ability to achieve price stability whilst supporting the Government's economic policy. [1862]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 2 June 1997]: The Government believe that low inflation is an essential precondition for high and stable levels of growth and employment. However, as we have seen over the past 18 years, excessively loose monetary policies have encouraged short but unsustainable booms, followed by higher inflation, recessions and unemployment. The Chancellor will set out the Government's approach to monetary policy in his Mansion House speech on 12 June.

European Union Grants

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total sum provided in grants, loans and subsidies to the United Kingdom over the past five years from the European Union; and what part of the total was given to bodies within the borough of Southend on Sea. [1692]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 2 June 1997]: The United Kingdom's total public sector receipts from the European Community, together with details of grants from the European Coal and Steel Community, for the financial years 1992–93 to 1996–97 are set out in the following table:

£ million

	Public sector receipts	ECSC grants
1992–93	2,810	47
1993–94	3,865	13
1994–95	3,603	42
1995–96	3,783	51
1996–97	4,542	28

In addition to public sector receipts there are certain receipts, for research and development, which are mainly paid direct to the private sector and are not covered here.

European Investment Bank loans to projects within the United Kingdom over the period 1992 to 1995 were as follows:

1992: £1.80 million

1993: £1.50 million

1994: £1.92 million

1995: £1.87 million

Information on 1996 is not yet available.

I regret that information is not available on how much of these receipts, grants and loans went to recipients in Southend on Sea.

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the average percentage reduction in household income which would result from the withdrawal of mortgage interest relief for home-owning households with income in each of the ten deciles of household income. [1852]

Ms Primarolo [holding answer 2 June 1997]: Information for 1997–98 is given in the table. The estimates are based on information projected from the 1994–95 Family Expenditure Survey and are therefore provisional.

Average percentage reduction in households income[1] as a result of withdrawing mortgage interest relief

Household income decile group	Average percentage reduction for households with a mortgage
Lowest ten per cent.	:—
Second	1.3
Third	1.6
Fourth	1.9
Fifth	1.9
Sixth	1.6
Seventh	1.4
Eighth	1.2
Ninth	0.9
Highest ten per cent.	0.7

[1] Household income is defined as income from all sources less income tax payments and National Insurance Contributions.
[2] Insufficient data to provide a reliable estimate.

DEFENCE

Armed Services (Redundancies)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service men and women were made redundant in the armed services in each year since 1992; and if he will make a statement. [1884]

Dr. John Reid: I will write to the hon. Member.

Departmental Computer Systems

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to ensure that his Department's computer systems will be millennium compliant; and if he will make a statement. [1252]

Mr. Spellar: Since early last year the Ministry of Defence (MOD) has been embarked on a programme to tackle the Year 2000 problem across all aspects of Defence, from routine support systems through to front line operational equipment.

My Department is managing its Year 2000 programme under the auspices of guidelines set by the Cabinet Office IT Unit (CITU) and is working closely with the Government Centre for Information Systems (CCTA) as a member of its Year 2000 Public Sector Group. Guidance which details the actions that need to be taken has been made widely available within the Department. All candidate systems are being surveyed and any necessary corrective action is being planned/undertaken. To ensure that suitable skilled resources are available without delay, "enabling" contracts have been placed with a number of companies.

An MOD Steering Committee has been established to oversee the programme with representation covering the breadth of the Department. In addition, a central help desk is operating successfully and an extensive awareness campaign is being mounted across my Department, with the aim of engaging the commitment of everyone in ensuring that all Defence systems are Year 2000 compliant before the 31 December, 1999.

MOD Homes (Isle of Wight)

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the homes owned by his Department on the Isle of Wight are currently empty. [1773]

Mr. Spellar: My Department has just one house on the Isle of Wight and this is underleased from Annington Homes Ltd. The house is presently occupied.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Unemployment (Young People)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his policy towards unemployed young people; and what will be the maximum period of being out of education and training yet seeking work which will not count as unemployment. [1646]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Our policy is to help young people gain the skills and experience they need to enable them to find and sustain employment.

The precise way in which measures of unemployment and labour market activity should be treated as the subject of public consultation by the Office for National Statistics.

Unemployment Benefit Disqualifications

Mr. Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many unemployed claimants for the north London district of the Employment Service have (a) been issued with warning letters for not actively seeking work, (b) had their claim referred to an adjudicating officer for not actively seeking work, (c) had their claims allowed or disallowed for not actively seeking work and (d) had their claim referred to an adjudicating officer for refusing suitable employment; and how many of those in (d) have had their benefit (i) disqualified and (ii) not disqualified in each year since 1989; [828]

(2) how many employers have participated in job interview guarantee work trials in respect of the north London district of the Employment Service in each year since 1991; how many claimants have participated in such work trials; how many claimants are currently participating in work trials; and how many participants have obtained full-time employment with their work trial employer; [829]

(3) how many people have joined job clubs in each year since 1991 in respect of the north London district of the Employment Service; how many have left; how many leavers obtained jobs; what were the other outcomes of leavers broken down by (a) ethnic origin and (b) gender; and if he will make a statement; [830]

(4) how many unemployed people have been referred to (a) restart courses, (b) jobplan workshops, and (c) workwise courses, by Employment Service counsellors in the north London district of the Employment Service in each year since 1991; how many attended and completed the course; what were the outcomes of the participants; how many had benefit penalties imposed for (1) not attending and (2) failing to complete their attendance at the workshops or courses; and if he will make a statement; [831]

(5) if he will list the (a) gender, (b) duration of unemployment and (c) ethnic origin of those who have entered Training for Work; and if he will indicate whether they have a disability (i) in respect of (1) the North London training and enterprise council and (2) the London region and (ii) in total; [832]

(6) how many income support and unemployment benefit claimants for the north London district covering the London borough of Haringey have (a) successfully and (b) unsuccessfully claimed income support under the hardship rules in each year since 1989, showing those whose claim was in doubt due to (a) not actively seeking work, (b) refusing suitable employment, (c) availability for work and (d) not attending a restart course, a jobplan workshop or a workwise course; and if he will make a statement; [833]

(7) how many people have attended a restart interview in each year since 1991 in respect of the north London district of the Employment Service; and what were the results of those interviews broken down in the same way as the answer of 18 December 1990, Official Report, column 148. [834]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Bernie Grant, dated 4 June 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions requesting various statistics about the North London District of the Employment Service. This is something that falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

You asked a number of questions about our North London District and I thought it would be helpful if I answered them in turn in one reply.

It may help if I first of all explain that North London District was created as part of the boundary review, which saw the introduction of the district structure to the Employment Service, in April 1994. This and the fact that we only keep information regionally for three years unfortunately means that we can only provide the material you require going back to 1994. However, I hope the data given below is helpful.

I should explain that the information on number of warning letters issued to job seekers for not actively seeking employment is not recorded. It may, however, be helpful to explain that since August 1992 it has not been a requirement for warning letters to be issued in every case of inadequate job search. Since this date warning letters have only been issued if Jobcentre staff consider a job seeker genuinely not to have understood what was required of them. The number of referrals to Adjudication Officers for not Actively Seeking Employment and for Refusal of Employment have only been recorded since April this year. Prior to this only the number of decisions made were recorded.

The following table shows the information available in respect of Actively Seeking Employment and Refusal of Employment in our North London District since 1994.

	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
Actively seeking employment
Decisions made	244	413	462
Allowances	29	56	56
Disallowances	215	357	406
Refusal of employment
Decisions made	47	288	247
Allowances	13	61	53
Disallowances	34	227	194

In relation to your question about Job Interview Guarantee Work Trials, it may help if I explain that Work Trials were established as a separate programme from the Job Interview Guarantee scheme in April 1993. The table below shows the number of Work Trials and subsequent job placings in the North London District since 1994. I should explain that we do not record the number of employers that participate in Work Trials, only the actual number that takes place.

Work trials	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
Number of work trials	226	427	420
Number gaining employment	125	227	189

The following table shows the information on Jobclubs you requested for the North London District since April 1994. We do not record information on leavers broken down by gender and ethnic origin.

Jobclub	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
Number of starts in period	6,502	5,624	3,421

Number of starts	384	246
Number of completers	284	163
Job entries	34	14
Referred to other programmes	100	90
Other outcomes	32	18
Total positive outcomes	166	122
Cases referred to BA	92	17

NB: The difference between "starts" and "completers" arises because some people leave Jobplan, Restart or Workwise courses prior to completion.

The statistical data you asked for in relation to the number of people attending Restart interviews and their results are detailed in the table below. You asked for the results to be broken down in the same way as the Answer of 18 December 1990, Official Report, column 148. It may help if I explain that the range of employment and training opportunities offered has altered and increased since 1991. Training for Work has replaced the Employment Training programme, and the Enterprise Allowance scheme, has been replaced by Business Start-up. The numbers shown for Business Start-up reflect the actual number of people who have opted for self-employment whereas, under the Enterprise Allowance scheme the number of people attending a seminar was measured.

It may help if I explain how the figures above are made up. In the year 1994/95 for example, 6,502 people went into Jobclubs in North London and 5,975 left of which 2,746 went into jobs and 787 into "other outcomes": ie there were 3,533 positive outcomes in total. However, it does not follow that the other 2,442 simply left Jobclubs and returned to unemployment. The Employment Service is only allowed to score as results people who leave a programme and find a job within 13 weeks of their time on the programme ending. People who have been in Jobclubs may well find jobs shortly after that, because their experience in the Jobclub has helped them improve their employability, but in such cases these would not be included in our Jobclub figures.

You asked for similar information about Jobplan, Restart and Workwise courses. It may help if I explain that although we keep records of the number of referrals made to the Benefits Agency where clients fail to attend or complete courses we do not keep records on the outcome of these referrals. I should also explain that we did not keep records of the number of referrals made to the Benefits Agency in 1994/95 and that in 1996/97 we only recorded the number of referrals made up to the end of September prior to the introduction of JSA. Subject to that, the tables below show the information that you requested for the North London District since 1994. You will want to note that the Workwise programme was not introduced until April 1995.

Number of referrals	10,239	6,998	5,026

You asked for details about the numbers of clients applying for Income Support under the hardship rules. It may help if I explain that this is the responsibility of the Benefits Agency, who have provided the table overleaf which provides most of the information you asked for. I understand from the Benefits Agency that they do not keep records of the number of Income Support hardship claims for clients who refused suitable employment. This information may be included in the data relating to availability for work and those not actively seeking work.

When studying the table you will need to take the following points into consideration:

1. Income Support (General) Regulation 8(3) relates to a person who is not treated as available for employment and the Adjudication Officer is satisfied that, unless Income Support is paid, the claimant or member of his family (if any) will suffer hardship.
2. Income Support (General) Regulation 10A(2) relates to a person who is not required to be actively seeking employment and is either pregnant, or one member of a couple is pregnant, is responsible for a child or young person or receives the disability premium and the Adjudication Officer is satisfied that, unless Income Support is paid, the claimant or a member of his family (if any) will suffer hardship.
3. Prior to April 1994 data was collated jointly for Restart and Jobplan.
4. Information has been provided by the BA's Central Data Unit and is subject to amendment.

Class Sizes

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the way in which pupil:teacher ratios and class sizes are currently calculated by his Department. [1538]

Mr. Byers: The pupil:teacher ratios (PTRs) within schools are calculated by dividing the total number of pupils on school registers (counting each part-time pupil as 0.5) by the total number of qualified teachers (adjusted to reflect the part-time working of some teachers).

Class sizes are calculated by dividing the numbers of pupils being taught together in classes at a particular point in the school timetable by the number of teachers, qualified or unqualified, deployed in such classes. Average class sizes are normally calculated for those classes involving only one teacher.

Both measures are derived from information collected from the annual count of pupils and teachers in schools in January each year.

Assisted Places

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many places, at which schools and at what cost were provided under the assisted places scheme in Northamptonshire in (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97. [1808]

Mr. Byers: The number of assisted places taken up and the cost of those places for each participating school in Northamptonshire in academic years 1995–96 and 1996–97 are given in the following table:

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many places, at what schools and at what cost were provided under the assisted places scheme in Derbyshire in 1995–96 and 1996–97. [1534]

Mr. Byers: The number of assisted places taken up and the cost of those places for each participating school in Derbyshire in academic years 1995–96 and 1996–97 are given in the following table:

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make it his policy to adopt a social model of disability in framing all future and amending previous relevant legislation and guidance; and if he will make a statement. [1682]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Our manifesto commits us to establishing "comprehensive, enforceable civil rights for disabled people against discrimination in society or at work, developed in partnership with all interested parties." We shall be consulting widely and developing our proposals in partnership with disability organisations, employers, employers organisations, trade unions and others. An essential issue will be the definition of disability. It is not appropriate for me to pre-empt the outcome of that consultation.

Nursery Places (Dorset)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to ensure the provision of nursery places for children in Dorset who would have been eligible for nursery vouchers in the September term 1997. [1777]

Mr. Byers: All Local Education Authorities in England have been invited to submit an interim Early Years Development Plan to secure places for all eligible four year olds in their area for the period until April 1998. LEAs will be expected to consult and co-operate with the private and voluntary sectors in these arrangements.

Where interim Early Years Development Plans are approved, recognised places in all sectors filled by eligible four year olds will be funded by grant provided by the Secretary of State. Where LEAs are unable to bring forward an acceptable interim plan, recognised places chosen by parents in the private and voluntary sectors will be funded by grant from the Secretary of State by reference to certificates of eligibility issued to those parents.

Teaching Redundancies

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teaching redundancies are expected in each local education authority at the end of the present academic year; how many there were in each local education authority in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [1370]

Mr. Byers: This information is not collected centrally.

Newly Qualified Teachers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many newly qualified teachers failed to gain employment on leaving college in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [1371]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table shows the number of students who successfully completed initial teacher training and their employment status at 31 March in the year after completion, for the most recent years available.

Position of BEd and PGCE completers at 31 March following calendar year of completion[2]

	Calendar year of completion
	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
Total completers in England and Wales	15,830	17,300	20,700	23,340	25,440
In service[1] at 31 March of year following completion in England and Wales:
Maintained schools	12,080	13,240	14,550	16,240	17,290
Other service[4]	520	460	750	880	980
Never in service[1] in England and Wales	3,160	3,520	5,320	6,150	7,110

Source:
DfEE, Database of Teacher Records.
Notes:
[1] The position at 31 March in the year after completion comes from service records collected for the Teachers' Superannuation Scheme (TSS). Qualified students who obtain a teaching appointment in an institution that is not covered by the TSS are shown as "never in service". For example, those who take up appointments in the "old" university sector, in the independent sector without TSS membership, or outside England and Wales.
[2] A considerable number of newly qualified teachers take a year or more before starting teaching. Data from teachers qualifying in 1993 indicate that around 8 per cent. were not in service in March 1994, but were in service one year later.
[3] Including less than 100 teachers who entered service following completion of ITT who had already left by 31 March of the year following completion.
[4] Any other sector or institutions with TSS membership, eg some independent schools, further education.

Office for Standards in Education Reports

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to make available hard copies of Ofsted reports to (a) hon. Members and (b) members of the public. [2139]

Mr. Byers: At present each inspected school is responsible for making its Ofsted inspection report available to parents and others. Each report is freely accessible on the internet. Hon. Members can obtain hard copies through the Library.

Primary Class Sizes

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each local education authority in England and Wales how many classes for five to seven-year-olds had more than 30 children as at Easter 1997. [2219]

Mr. Byers: Information on class sizes for local education authorities in England is not available in the form requested.

Information on class sizes for local education authorities in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Open Government

9. Ms Abbott: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to increase openness in government. [527]

Dr. David Clark: In our manifesto, the Government were clear in their commitment to the regeneration of our democratic process. Central to that is the White Paper on New Government I announced yesterday.

This will set out how we will deliver accountable, accessible, responsive and efficient Government.

These proposals alongside our Freedom of Information Act will bring an agenda of openness to our system of Government at all levels.

14. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to introduce a freedom of information Bill; and if he will make a statement. [533]

Dr. Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend, the Member for Clwyd, South (Mr. Jones).

15. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to publish his proposals relating to freedom of information. [535]

17. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to promote open government. [538]

19. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his proposals in respect of open government. [540]

20. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what initiatives he is taking to promote open government. [541]

Dr. Clark: I refer hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Delyn (Mr. Hanson).

Quangos

13. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what timetable he proposes for (a) reducing the number of quangos and (b) making the remaining quangos more democratic. [531]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Government propose to undertake a review of quangos with a view to reducing their numbers. The issue of making the remainder more democratic will be addressed in the context of the forthcoming White Paper on Better Government, announced yesterday by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Freedom of Information (Commercial Confidentiality)

16. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has to ensure that issues of commercial confidentiality do not restrict the scope of freedom of information legislation. [536]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Provision to protect genuine commercial confidentiality is necessary in freedom of information legislation but this must be kept to the minimum consistent with the public interest in openness.

Government Departments (Electronic Access)

18. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to introduce greater electronic access by citizens to Government Departments. [539]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Government are determined to use the tremendous potential of IT to bring government closer to the people and provide them with a more direct and accessible service for the 21st century.

Civil Service

21. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will meet representatives of civil service unions to discuss conditions of service. [542]

Dr. David Clark: I have already met civil service union representatives and morale and conditions of service were among the issues raised.

Government Agencies

22. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has to review the relationship of Government agencies with (a) Government Departments, (b) Ministers and (c) Parliament. [543]

Mr. Kilfoyle: In the first instance, it is for the Minister responsible for each particular agency to keep these important relationships in good order but we are considering whether there are any matters of general application that need to be addressed. We will do this in the context of our commitment to modernising Government services and making them more responsive.

Government Appointments

23. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what new procedures he proposes for the appointment to paid posts nominated by the Government. [544]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Government will continue to support the principle of selection based on merit. Ministerial appointments to executive non-departmental public bodies and NHS bodies have been subject to the Commissioner for Public Appointments' Code of Practice since 1 July 1996. The Government will be considering with the Commissioner whether his remit should be extended to other public bodies.

Deregulation

24. Mr. Luff: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his policy towards deregulation. [545]

Dr. David Clark: Our aim is to create the economic conditions in which business can flourish. We want to modernise Government for business—particularly small firms—and citizens. That is why we have undertaken to cut unnecessary red tape and not to impose burdensome new regulations.

Scottish Devolution

25. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what role he has in relation to Her Majesty's Government's proposals for Scottish devolution. [546]

Dr. David Clark: I will take part in collective discussion of the issues with my colleagues, especially in relation to those issues which fall within my departmental responsibilities.

Internet

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he intends to continue to implement government.direct. [532]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Green Paper government.direct contained many good ideas. The Government will harness the power of IT to bring government closer to the people and provide better services for everybody. We will consult interested parties on a range of ideas for taking this forward, including those in government.direct and the paper responding to the initial comments on it.

Civil Service (Staff Morale)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he intends to meet representatives of the civil service unions to discuss staff morale. [537]

Dr. David Clark: I have already met civil service union representatives and morale and conditions of service were among the issues raised.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Civil Service (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals she has to increase the number of ethnic minority employees in her Department. [739]

Mr. Field: The Department supports the Cabinet Office Programme for Action on Race and is fully committed to developing a culturally diverse workforce. Its recruitment procedures are designed to encourage people from ethnic backgrounds to be successful in job applications. Recruitment is by fair and open competition and selection is based on merit. Advertisements are placed in the ethnic minority press and with Local Racial Equality Councils and we also undertake outreach projects. Recruitment exercises are monitored to ensure equal treatment for all applicants and to ensure that those involved in the monitoring process have all received equal opportunities awareness training.

In addition the Department sponsors 20 Windsor fellows a year, which is an opportunity for ethnic minority undergraduates to undertake work placements within the DSS.

Long-term Unemployment

Mr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to review the working of current rules governing the consequences of long-term unemployed people obtaining temporary work and then returning to benefits; and if she will make a statement. [840]

Mr. Field: Our New Deal measures will offer new opportunities to the long-term unemployed of all ages. Employers who take on long-term unemployed people aged over 25 will receive a subsidy of £75 per week, and the employee will receive an opportunity to demonstrate both their existing skills and their potential for acquiring new ones.

Over the next few months we shall be looking closely at all the features of the benefit system which might have an impact on work incentives.

Appeals Tribunal

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will review the existing operation of appeals tribunals for applicants to (a) the jobseekers allowance and (b) incapacity benefit. [858]

Mr. Bradley: We intend to bring forward legislation to improve current decision making and appeals arrangements for all social security benefits. Further details will be announced in due course.

Child Support

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the number and percentage of Child Support Agency cases in which the absent parent is in arrears (a) in total and (b) by regional office for each year since the establishment of the agency. [1359]

Mr. Bradley: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Ms Roseanna Cunningham, dated 3 June 1997:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number and percentage of cases in which the absent parent is in arrears.

The latest available data on the total number of live cases with a full or interim maintenance assessment (FMA or IMA) held on the child support computer system shows that on 30 April 1997 there were 599,600 live and assessed cases. A breakdown is not available by Child Support Agency Centre.

The total number of Child Support Agency cases with arrears outstanding from the absent parent is 300,903, or 50% of all live and assessed cases. This figure comprises 61,992 category A IMA cases, (10% of all live and assessed cases) and 238,911 FMA and other IMA cases, (40% of all live and assessed cases). Arrears include, initial payment period maintenance, current maintenance, maintenance arrears, interest and rescheduled arrears. The table below shows a breakdown of these cases by Child Support Agency Centre.

	IMA cat A	FMA and other IMAs	Total
Dudley	11,025	41,196	52,221
Hastings	8,031	31,565	39,596
Falkirk	11,132	40,474	51,606
Plymouth	11,430	43,235	54,665
Birkenhead	8,530	39,200	47,730
Belfast	11,844	43,241	55,085
Agency total	61,992	238,911	300,903

The Agency does not have historical data on the number of cases with arrears outstanding to give comparisons for previous years. The information above represents a 'snapshot' view of the number of arrears cases at 23 May 1997.

An IMA is usually imposed where the absent parent, parent with care or their respective partners do not provide all the information required under Child Support legislation to make a FMA. They are intended to encourage compliance.

One of four different categories of IMA can be imposed depending on the nature of the missing information, ie category A, B, C or D. The vast majority of IMAs issued are punitive Category As which are intended to encourage compliance. Category B and D IMAs may or may not be punitive depending on the circumstances of the case. Category C IMAs are non-punitive and are used to allow self-employed absent parents extra time to provide the required financial details.

I hope this is helpful.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

ENVIRONMENT AND THE REGIONS

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimates his Department has made of the cumulative savings which have resulted from compulsory competitive tendering. [235]

Mr. Raynsford: Research commissioned by the Department identified savings alongside changes to the quality of local services. It shows average annual savings on contract prices of blue-collar services of 6 per cent. for the first round of tendering under the Local Government Act 1988, and 9 per cent. for the second round. The research also indicates that these savings have been accompanied by only minor improvements in service standards, and that more attention needs to be given to the development of local performance indicators.

Other research, commissioned outside the Department, suggests a wide variation in estimates of savings depending upon the way in which social costs and benefits are treated.

Whales and Dolphins

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he plans to take to increase protection for whales and dolphins within UK waters; and if he will make a statement. [1074]

Ms Angela Eagle: All cetaceans are subject to the highest level of statutory protection in UK waters.

The UK is a signatory to the Agreement on the Conservation of Small Cetaceans in the Baltic and North Seas (ASCOBANS), and a member of the International Whaling Commission.

A biodiversity species action plan for the harbour porpoise is in place which has as its objective the maintenance of the current range and abundance, with a longer term aim of ensuring that no anthropogenic factors inhibit the return to waters that previously held the harbour porpoise.

The Government will be considering the effectiveness of these measures.

Plutonium Waste

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the predicted dose level attributed to plutonium wastes in the HMIP report TR-Z2-9 Tyrer et al. 1995; and how this compared to the target levels set out in the Radioactive Waste Management Policy White Paper (Cm 2919). [1778]

Mr. Meacher: The maximum dose calculated in the report was 9 sieverts per year as a very unlikely worst case. But as no estimate of probability was made for the scenario producing this dose, it cannot be compared with the target of a one in a million per year risk of developing a fatal cancer or serious hereditary defect, set out in the White Paper, "Review of Radioactive Waste Management Policy" (Cm 2919).

In undertaking this work, HMIP rehearsed some of the procedures and methods which it might need to apply in detailed examination of modelling studies underlying a post-closure safety case for a radioactive waste repository. The studies were not designed to inform HMIP about the suitability of a particular site for the development of a repository.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the level of plutonium contamination in the plutonium contaminated wastes which would be produced by the Sellafield MOX plant. [1798]

Mr. Meacher: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, has made no estimate of his own. I am informed that the operation of the Sellafield MOX plant would be likely to give rise to some 120 cubic metres of plutonium contaminated material (defined as solid waste containing more than 0.1 gigabecquerels per tonne of plutonium) per year.

Magnox Power Stations

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what licensing and planning arrangements are planned to govern the transfer of Magnox power stations from operational to decommissioned status. [1783]

Mr. Meacher: Licensing of civil nuclear sites under the Nuclear Installations Act 1965 (as amended) is a continuous process, from when a licence is granted until decommissioning is complete and the site presents no danger. There is no need, therefore, for any changes to the licensing regime as Magnox power stations transfer from operational to decommissioned status. Nuclear operators are required under the licence to agree detailed plans for decommissioning their plant with the Health and Safety Executive's HM Nuclear Installations Inspectorate.

Under Directive 97/11/EC, which amends Directive 85/337/EEC on the assessment of the effects of certain public and private projects on the environment, an environmental impact assessment will be required specially for the decommissioning of nuclear power stations. The new Directive is due to be implemented by March 1999.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the research reports prepared by the Disposal Safety Assessment Team managed by AEA Technology on behalf of Nirex. [1789]

Mr. Meacher: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, has undertaken no assessment of these reports.

Internal Migration

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the extent of internal migration between each region of the United Kingdom; if he will place this research in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [1366]

Mr. Caborn: My Department is planning to commission research to review existing data and evidence on the determinants of migration flows in England, to help assess the feasibility of formally modelling migration flows as part of the economic modelling of household formation and the demand and need for housing at regional and sub-regional level. The work should be completed towards the end of 1997, and the usual practice is then to publish a research report.

The Office for National Statistics (ONS) analyse recent migration statistics to derive population estimates for England and constituent local authority areas. Assumptions about future migration flows between the four countries of the United Kingdom are developed by the Government Actuary's Department, as part of the process of producing national population projections—the latest projections are published by The Stationery Office in the volume "1994-based National population projections". Assumptions about future migration flows within England, based on recent trends and informed by consultation with local authorities, are prepared as part of the development of the ONS sub-national population projections for shire counties, metropolitan districts and London boroughs. The latest projections are published under the title "1993-based Subnational population projections".

Capital Receipts

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the capital receipts from the sale of council houses currently held by each local authority; and if he will make a statement. [1368]

Ms Armstrong: A table setting out the information requested has been placed in the Library of the House. We will be consulting the Local Government Association and local authorities on the Government's Capital Receipts Initiative in due course.

Household Projections Survey

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will evaluate the findings of the Household Projections Survey; and if he will make a statement. [1369]

Mr. Caborn: My Department has not commissioned any survey as such into the household projections.

The most recent (1992-based) household projections were published in March 1995 in "Projections of Households in England to 2016", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. These household projections have been subject to considerable public scrutiny, in particular by the Environment Select Committee in evidence for its report on Housing Need in 1996. Whilst generally endorsing the projections, the Committee recommended that the Department continue to examine the extent to which household formation is affected by economic and social factors. This is currently being addressed by the Department of Applied Economics, Cambridge University, as part of a wider research project for the Department on the modelling of the need for social housing. The project should be finalised by the Autumn.

Last year, the Department also commissioned Heriot-Watt University to undertake a detailed literature review on household formation, with particular emphasis on evaluating the available evidence on the extent to which economic factors affect the propensity for new households to form. This work has recently been completed and I would expect the report to be published as soon as practicable.

Local Authority Financial Support

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the changes proposed in the Elliott report on local authority financial support; what further studies he has initiated; and if he will make a statement. [1570]

Mr. Raynsford: The work of Professor Elliott and the Review of the Area Cost Adjustment provided a useful examination of the issues, though not one which the Local Authority Associations wanted implemented for 1997–98 SSAs. The Department has recently commissioned research to examine some of the concerns of local government about the Review's proposals. It will report in early July and we shall discuss with local government both the findings and the way forward on the Area Cost Adjustment.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list each of the areas to be covered by regional development agencies; and if he will make a statement. [1367]

Mr. Caborn: I will be making an announcement shortly about our intention to set up Regional Development Agencies.

TRANSPORT

Marine Safety Agency

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how his Department will enforce the implementation of British Marine Safety Agency staffing requirements and the new EU VAT directives. [1429]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Marine Safety Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. Andrew George, dated 4 June 1997:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your Question about the enforcement of UK qualification requirements for masters and officers of large privately-owned commercially-operated yachts.

It may be helpful if I summarise the background. Until recently, masters and officers on vessels of this kind were required to comply with the deck officer qualification requirements in UK merchant shipping regulations. Many people working in the professional yachting industry, however, found it impossible to obtain the necessary certificates because they had come to professional yachting from leisure yachting and could not meet the requirement to have worked on merchant navy vessels for a minimum specified period. In consequence, the regulation were not being observed. This resulted in substantial variations in the standards of competence of officers working on these vessels.

Therefore, in consultation with the industry, sail training organisations and the Warsash Maritime Operations Centre, the Agency has developed an alternative qualification. This is the Deck Officer Class 5 (or 4) with command endorsement and is limited to yachts and sail training vessels. It requires a base qualification of the Royal Yachting Association/Department of Transport certificate of competence Yachtmaster Offshore (or Ocean) with commercial endorsement. This is more readily obtainable by those who work in the professional yachting industry and, when allied with a number of additional mandatory training modules, provides the knowledge and experience which we and the industry consider necessary for the safe operation of these large yachts. It can be seen that the MSA has worked closely with industry and other interested parties to develop a qualification which will be relevant to the operation of these vessels. You should also be aware that this Code and the associated qualifications for the Masters and Officers will be adopted by the Cayman Islands, Bermuda, the Isle of Man and, in due course the British Virgin Islands.

Our approach on enforcement will be to allow our recognised classification societies to carry out the survey and certification of vessels classed with them. The enforcement of these requirements will in general be through our usual practice of inspecting both ships and the service providers to ensure that the standards are being complied with. However we would envisage further discussions with the industry and all other interested parties on the details of the enforcement regime to be employed in view of the distribution of the vessels throughout the world.

I am sorry I cannot comment on the new EU VAT Directive which falls outside my areas of responsibility. May I suggest that you direct this enquiry to HM Custom and Excise.

Scottish Homes

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to allow Scottish Homes tenants to have a local authority option in the event of a housing stock transfer. [1730]

Mr. Chisholm: We are reviewing the arrangements for the transfer of Scottish Homes houses in the light of the Government's commitment to give tenants choice in their landlord.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Departmental Publications

Mr. Burstow: To ask the President of the Council by what means her Department makes available its publications in (a) Braille, (b) audio tape and (c) large print; and how this is publicised. [1669]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: None of my Department's publications is currently made available in any of these formats, and there have to date been no requests for this to be done.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Privy Council Office (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Council how many civil servants, of each grade, in the Privy Council Office were of Asian origin, on 5 May. [720]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: On 5 May 1997 there was one staff member of the Privy Council Office of Asian origin, at the grade of Personal Secretary, out of a total staff of 38.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Council what proposals she has to increase the number of ethnic minority employees in the Privy Council Office. [721]

Mrs. Taylor: There are currently two staff at the Privy Council Office of ethnic minority origin, out of a total staff of 38. My Department's policy in recruiting and promoting staff is to provide equality of opportunity to suitably qualified candidates, irrespective of their racial origin or religion.

Disability

Mr. Burstow: To ask the President of the Council if she will make it her policy to adopt a social model of disability in framing all future and amending previous relevant legislation and guidance; and if she will make a statement. [1670]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The Privy Council Office does not sponsor legislation. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has described in his answer to the hon. Member the steps which the Government will be taking in pursuit of our manifesto commitment to establishing comprehensive, enforceable civil rights for disabled people against discrimination in society or at work.

Drugs Misuse

Mr. Spring: To ask the President of the Council how she proposes to tackle the rising incidence of drug misuse. [534]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The Government will appoint an anti-drugs supremo to co-ordinate our action against drugs across all Government departments and key agencies. She or he will report directly to me as Chairman of the Cabinet's co-ordinating committee on drugs misuse. One of the "drugs czar's" first tasks will be to review urgently the existing drugs strategy and put forward proposals for tackling the problem with renewed vigour. This will build on action already underway at both national and local level, including legislative proposals to break the links between drugs and crime, and the work of Drug Action Teams across the country.

WALES

Devolution

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what (a) financial and (b) other support the Welsh Office intends to give the organisation Senedd i Gymru for its yes campaign on devolution; and if he will make a statement. [1280]

Mr. Ron Davies: I do not intend to provide financial and other support to the organisation Senedd i Gymru.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to set up, fund and support an official all-party organisation to campaign in favour of a yes vote in the devolution referendum; and if he will make a statement. [1279]

Mr. Davies: I have no plans to set up or fund an official all party organisation to campaign in favour of a yes vote on the Government's proposals for a Welsh Assembly.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of the current powers and duties of the Secretary of State he assesses will remain his responsibility in the event of devolution. [1089]

Mr. Davies: I will continue to represent Welsh interests in Cabinet contributing to the formulation of the Government's policy and proposals for legislation. Details of the Government's proposals, including my role will be set out in the White Paper to be published in the summer.

Mr. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what budget has been allocated by his Department to support the Government's campaign for devolution.[1088]

Mr. Davies: The Welsh Office running cost and publicity budgets set for 1997–98 by the previous Government made no specific provision for expenditure related to devolution. Welsh Office budgets are being reviewed.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by what means his Department makes available its publications in (a) braille, (b) audio tape and (c) large print; and how this is publicised. [1661]

Mr. Ron Davies: Details of Welsh Office publications produced in formats other than normal print have been publicised through information releases to the media and through direct contact with relevant organisations, e.g. RNIB.

The Welsh Office has produced the following publications in braille; large print or audio cassettes. Some have been produced bi-lingually.

Council Tax—A guide to the New Tax for Local Government in Wales (braille, large print and audio tape)

Public Bodies

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate his Department has made of the running costs of each non-departmental public body in Wales in 1992; and if he will compare these in percentage terms with the current running costs of each body. [1235]

Mr. Ron Davies: The following table sets out the running costs outturn for 1992–93 for each NDPB, together with plans for 1997–98 and the percentage change. In some cases the comparisons between the two years are not straightforward. The running cost definition of the Welsh Development Agency, Development Board for Rural Wales, Wales Tourist Board, Cardiff Bay Development Corporation and the Land Authority for

Wales were rebased in the intervening period; and the Further and Higher Education Funding councils did not assume their full responsibilities until April 1993:

Beef Farms

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit Pwll Farm, Trevddyn and Carreg y Llech Farm, Trevddyn, Alyn and Deeside, to meet beef farmers. [1306]

Mr. Ron Davies: I have no immediate plans to do so, but I have already had meetings with the NFU and the FUW and our discussions did include the problem currently facing the beef industry.

Transport Minor Works

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will review his funding policy for transport minor works schemes; and if he will make a statement. [1299]

Mr. Hain: Transport Grant is available for schemes costing over £5 million. Smaller projects are funded at individual local authorities' discretion from unhypothecated resources. I am currently reviewing these arrangements and anticipate that any changes will be introduced for the 1998–99 bidding round.

Ministerial Visit (Broughton)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a visit to (a) the Raytheon Jets Service Centre, Broughton, Flintshire and (b) British Aerospace, Broughton, Flintshire. [1266]

Mr. Ron Davies: My officials are in regular contact with both companies. I am delighted at their recent successes and congratulate my hon. Friend on his work in saving the Raytheon plant in his constituency. I hope to visit at a suitable opportunity.

Departmental Computer Systems

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to ensure that his Department's computer systems are millennium compliant; and if he will make a statement. [1241]

Mr. Ron Davies: An assessment of the effect of the millennium date change has been undertaken. I do not expect there to be any major costs involved in ensuring that my Department's computer systems can cater for the year 2000.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Compensation Agency

Mr. Desmond Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Compensation Agency's Corporate Plan for 1997–98 to 1999–2000 and the Business Plan for 1997–98 will be published. [2154]

Mr. Ingram: The Compensation Agency's Corporate and Business Plans will be published today. The plans explain the Agency's business and organisation and set out assumptions about workloads and resources which underpin the plans and targets.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Chickens

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many chickens have been dead on arrival at United Kingdom poultry slaughter houses since 24 April. [1121]

Mr. Morley: On the basis that my hon. Friend is referring to 24 April 1996, the information requested is as follows:

	Total throughput	Dead on arrival	Percentage
Great Britain	695,243,052	[1]1,378,892	0.2
Northern Ireland	58,091,168	[2]154,657	0.3

[1] To 27 April 1997.
[2] To 24 March 1997.

Animal Exports

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many pigs were included in the consignments exported on (a) 15 May and (b) 19 May; what factors led him on 16 May to issue a notice under the Welfare of Animals During Transport Order 1994 preventing the export from Dover of a consignment of pigs; what steps he plans to take to ensure regular compliance in the future with the health and welfare laws governing the export of live animals; and if he will make a statement. [1273]

Mr. Morley: A total of 2,919 pigs were exported on the MV Caroline on 15 May and 1,583 on 19 May. Officials delayed the 16 May consignment by serving a notice because they were not satisfied with the information given as to the destination. This is part of the Government's overall policy of applying the highest possible standards to this trade and of pressing the other Member States to do likewise.

The Government strongly prefer meat to be exported on the hook rather than on the hoof. Where animals are exported live, the public must have full confidence that the strictest possible welfare rules are being applied to this trade. We will not compromise on these standards.

A consultation letter has gone out to interested parties seeking suggestions and comments by 18 June. I have commissioned an urgent review of the arrangements for ensuring that animals are rested, fed, watered, cleared as fit and certified prior to export in accordance with the law.

BSE

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 21 May, Official Report columns 95-6, (1) which of the typical selection of identified landfill sites, where checks in respect of ground water quality have been or will be carried out, have a chalk base; [1509]

(2) if the part of Beddingham landfill site where carcases of cattle infected by BSE were disposed of was lined to prevent seepage into the chalk below; what other classes of waste have been permitted for disposal in that section of the site; and what monitoring of that section of site has been carried out subsequent to the disposal therein of the carcases referred to; [1510]

(3) if Beddingham landfill site is one of the typical selection of identified landfill sites where checks in respect of ground water quality have been or will be carried out. [1511]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 June 1997]: The Environment Agency has responsibility for the safe regulation of landfill sites in England and Wales under Part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The Agency has advised that the Beddingham landfill site is licensed to accept industrial, commercial and household waste; there was no sub-division of the site to keep these different waste streams apart; and that the carcases landfilled there (fewer than 10) were deposited in an unlined area of the site with a chalk base.

The Environment Agency monitors ground water quality in the vicinity of licensed landfill sites to check for leachate contamination as part of their statutory duties. It is understood that there are ten boreholes at Beddingham where regular monitoring of groundwater is undertaken by the operators of the site.

The Agency has carried out a qualitative assessment of all the sites concerned taking into account the number of carcases buried, the degree of containment and the proximity of water sources. It has carried out a further more detailed quantitative assessment of a selection of sites. This includes a chalk based site but not Beddingham itself.

The Agency presented its quantitative assessment to the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee for comments. The Agency is preparing to publish the final results of the assessment very shortly. Copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Disability

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make it her policy to adopt a social model of disability in framing all future and amending previous relevant legislation and guidance; and if she will make a statement. [1660]

Clare Short: This Department currently has a policy of equal opportunity but is developing an action plan to achieve equality of opportunity specifically for disabled staff.

Overseas Aid

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the amounts of money Britain has given in overseas aid (a) in real terms and (b) as a percentage of gross domestic product in each of the last five years; and if she will make a statement. [1882]

Clare Short: International comparisons of figures for official development assistance (oda) are normally presented in relation to gross national product on a calendar year basis. UK assistance between 1991 and 1995 (the latest year for which figures are available) was as follows:

	Real terms (million at 1995 prices)	Oda/GNP (percentage)
1991	2,044	0.32
1992	1,988	0.31
1993	2,029	0.31
1995	2,000	0.28

The Government is firmly committed to working for a safer, more decent and environmentally stable world, and the eradication of poverty. As announced in The Queen's Speech, our development strategy will be set out in a White Paper to be published in the Autumn.

TREASURY

Revenue and Expenditure

Mr. Forth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the difference between total tax revenue and total public expenditure in (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales for the current year and each of the subsequent two years. [643]

Mr. Darling: The table shows figures for general government receipts and expenditure in Scotland and Wales in 1994–95, the latest year for which figures are available. Estimates and forecasts for later years are not available. The estimates for England are derived as the residual from the published UK figures, after deducting figures for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

General Government Receipts (GGR), General Government Expenditure (GGE) and the General Government Borrowing Requirement (GGBR) in England, Scotland and Wales, 1994–95 (£ billion)

	GGR[1]	GGE[2]	GGBR[3]
England	210.1	237.6	27.5
Scotland	22.1	30.3	8.2
Wales	9.9	15.6	5.7

Notes:

[1] Figures for GGR exclude North Sea revenues, which are ascribed to the Continental Shelf.

[2] Excluding privatisation proceeds.

[3] Excluding North Sea revenues and privatisation proceeds.

Source:

The figures for Scotland and Wales were published in "Government Expenditure and Revenue" for Scotland and Wales, respectively. The figures for England are derived by residual from the UK figures, taking into account the estimates for Northern Ireland.

Value Added Tax

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the United Kingdom's entitlement to levy VAT at zero rates ended; what powers the Government are exercising to continue zero rates; and if he will seek an assurance from the Commission that it will not challenge these powers in the European Court. [975]

Dawn Primarolo: The United Kingdom is entitled to continue applying its existing VAT zero rates. Our zero rates are expressly provided for in EC law under Article 28(2)(a) of the Sixth VAT Directive. This provision is linked to the duration of the 'transitional period', but this continues automatically until such time as any 'definitive' VAT regime is introduced, which would require the unanimous agreement of all Member States. In light of this there would be little to be gained from seeking any assurance from the Commission on the issue.

Windfall Levy

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement regarding the effect of the proposed windfall tax on utilities which have never been in public ownership. [1644]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The Chancellor of the Exchequer will announce details of the windfall levy in his Budget statement.

Sir George Young: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if (a) the privatised train operating companies, (b) Railtrack, (c) the rolling stock companies, (d) bus companies, (e) airports and (f) ports fall within his public definition of companies liable to a windfall tax. [1508]

Mr. Robinson: The Chancellor of the Exchequer will announce details of the windfall levy in his Budget statement.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the individual companies which he assesses to have made excess profits since they were privatised. [1850]

Mr. Robinson [holding answer 2 June 1997]: The Chancellor of the Exchequer will announce details of the windfall levy in his Budget statement.

Mr. Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of how the levels of investment and employment in the utilities will be affected by a windfall levy. [685]

Mr. Robinson: The Government will take all relevant considerations into account in designing the windfall levy; to this end, we have invited representations from companies on the technical operation of the levy and are consulting the regulators.

Ministerial Offices (Refurbishment)

Ms Keeble: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was spent on the refurbishment of ministerial offices in the Treasury between 1992 and 1997. [1800]

Mrs. Liddell: No refurbishment work other than standard redecorations has been undertaken on ministerial offices in the last five years. The cost of decorating Ministers' offices is accounted for along with all other redecoration work in the Treasury and could be separated out only at disproportionate cost.

Payroll Donations (Charities)

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to extend tax concessions on payroll donations to charities to people in receipt of company pensions. [1700]

Dawn Primarolo: Company pensions are taxed through the PAYE systems. Tax deductible donations can be made from them so long as the payroll operator is prepared to make the necessary arrangements with an agency charity.

Court of the Bank of England

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what ways the Court of the Bank of England will be reformed to enable it to take into account the full range of industrial and business views within the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [1868]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 2 June 1997]: The Chancellor said in his 6 May letter to the Governor of the Bank of England that the Court will be representative of the whole of the United Kingdom. The non-executive members will be appointed for their expertise and will be drawn widely from industry, commerce and finance.

PRIME MINISTER

Referendums

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister what estimate he has made of the cost to public funds of the two referendums provided by the Referendums (Scotland and Wales) Bill. [1636]

The Prime Minister: The estimated cost of the referendums will be up to £8 million, of which £5 million will be for Scotland, and up to £3 million for Wales.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Prime Minister what actions the Government will take to implement the decision of the European Commission of Human Rights in respect of legal rights of British nuclear test veterans to obtain war pensions and compensation for radiation-linked illnesses. [1916]

The Prime Minister: The European Commission of Human Rights has referred two cases relating to British nuclear test veterans to the European Court of Human Rights for decision. The cases will be heard in November 1997 and the Government will contest the cases because we do not agree that the lack of contemporaneous yield and radiation records prevented nuclear test veterans from getting a fair hearing before the Pensions Appeal Tribunal. The studies of the health of the test veterans, conducted by the National Radiological Protection Board and the Imperial Cancer Research Fund, concluded that participation in the nuclear weapons testing programme had had no long term detectable effect on the veterans expectation of life or on their risk of developing cancer.

Council of Ministers (Stability Pact)

Mr. Cash: To ask the Prime Minister if he will continue the practice of previous Governments of treating political agreement to legislative proposals in the Council of Ministers as equivalent to final agreement, with particular reference to the stability pact. [1925]

The Prime Minister: Yes.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Diplomatic Representation (Tehran)

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the normal level of current United Kingdom diplomatic representation in Tehran. [1207]

Mr. Fatchett: There are 15 full-time UK diplomatic staff in Tehran. Our Embassy is headed by a Charge d'Affaires.

Iranian Diplomatic Representation (London)

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the permitted level of Iranian diplomatic representation in London. [1209]

Mr. Fatchett: Iranian diplomatic representation in London is restricted to 15 full time diplomatic staff.

Iranian Dissidents

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action has been taken following a German court's judgment that the Iranian Government were responsible for the Mykonos cafe killing of Iranian dissidents in Germany. [1208]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The EU immediately issued a statement condemning the evidence of official Iranian involvement in these murders and withdrew its Heads of Mission for consultation. The UK associated itself fully with the Declaration issued by the EU General Affairs Council on 29 April 1997. This confirmed that there was no basis for the continuation of the Critical Dialogue between the EU and Iran. Measures were also adopted on ministerial visits, arms sales, visas and intelligence personnel. The EU council decided to keep the relationship with Iran under close review.

Treaty of Rome (Prosecutions)

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many times each European Union member state was prosecuted in the European Court of Justice under the terms of article 169 of the treaty of Rome in 1995 and 1996. [1885]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The enforcement of Community law—commenced under Article 169 of the EC Treaty—has a number of stages which can take more than one year to complete. The latest figures are contained in the Commission's Thirteenth Annual Report on Monitoring the Application of Community Law (1995) which is in the Libraries of the House. The table below from the report, details established infringements by stage of proceeding and Member State for 1991–1995, giving an indicative overall picture. The report for 1996 will be published soon. It will be deposited in the Libraries of the House when it becomes available.

Defence Exports

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 22 May, Official Report, column 135, if he will publish a detailed list stating each of the criteria which will be the subject of his review, a list of those countries where concerns have been expressed that United Kingdom supplied defence equipment has been used for internal repression; and if he will define what he means by international stability. [2225]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The existing criteria against which officials consider licence applications for the export of conventional arms are contained in this Department's guidance booklet for desk officers, a copy of which has been placed in the Libraries of the House. Specific concerns have been expressed in the media and elsewhere about a range of countries where UK defence equipment may have been used for internal repression. The review will not, however, focus on individual countries. Its purpose is to meet our commitment not to permit the sale of arms to any regime which might use them for internal repression or international aggression. It is the latter which requires officials to consider implications of a proposed export of arms for international stability, taking into account inter alia the effect on regional tension and stability and any existing armed conflict.

Gibraltar

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will propose the enfranchisement of the Gibraltarians in the European Union. [2015]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We are aware of the strength of feeling in Gibraltar about this issue. But there are real legal and practical difficulties in the way of any change in the present position on voting in the European Parliament elections.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 2 June, Official Report, column 82, if he will seek at the European Council to free Gibraltar airport from Spanish-imposed constraints. [2092]

Mr. Henderson: The principal purpose of the European Council is to conclude the IGC. It is not an appropriate forum in which to raise the issue of Gibraltar airport.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Conduct of Defence by Accused Persons

Mr. Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department in what percentage of cases heard in court the accused conducted his or her own defence in the last three years. [1939]

Mr. Hoon: The information requested is not available for cases heard in the magistrates' courts. The proportion of all defendants indicted for trial in the Crown Court who were not legally represented (either under legal aid or privately) was 0.8 per cent. in 1994, 0.7 per cent. in 1995 and 0.8 per cent. in 1996. Of those defendants in cases for sentence in the Crown Court, 15 per cent. were not legally represented (either under legal aid or privately) in 1994. The corresponding figures for 1995 and 1996 were also 15 per cent. Of those appellants who appealed to the Crown Court against their conviction and/or sentence in the magistrates' courts, 38 per cent. were not legally represented either through legal aid or privately in 1994. In 1995 and 1996, the figures were 38 per cent. and 34 per cent. respectively.

Unpursued Legal Matters

Mr. Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimates he has of the number of people who failed to pursue legal matters in the courts on account of their financial situation in the last three years. [1940]

Mr. Hoon: I have no such estimates, and I do not see how useful estimates could be made. Many factors may affect a decision on whether or not to litigate. For example, people have different priorities for how they spend their money, and other factors such as uncertainty about the outcome and costs of the case, and their willingness to undergo the stress of litigation will often affect their decisions.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what advice his Department offers to people who neither qualify for legal aid nor have sufficient private means to make use of the justice system. [1941]

Mr. Hoon: For certain proceedings a person may enter into a conditional fee agreement whereby a solicitor can take a case on a "no win no fee" basis. At present conditional fees are available for personal injury cases, insolvency actions and cases before the European Court of Human Rights. I shall shortly be considering the possibility of extending conditional fees to other areas. In addition legal expenses insurance may be available for some types of civil dispute.

Legal Aid

Mr. Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to change his Department's policy on eligibility for legal aid. [1942]

Mr. Hoon: There are no plans at present to change eligibility for legal aid. However there is to be a review of the proposed reforms of the civil justice system and legal aid. We will consider the scope for changes to eligibility for legal aid in the light of the outcome of the review.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to widen eligibility for legal aid to those defending libel actions; and if he will make a statement. [1944]

Mr. Hoon: There are no plans to extend the scope of the legal aid scheme to include defending libel actions. Successive Governments have taken the view that the outcomes of such cases are uniquely difficult to foresee and that even if the general mechanisms against unmeritorious proceedings could be strengthened in some way, they would still not provide an effective safeguard against the potential waste of public money.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Animal Experimentation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps were taken to ensure that the dogs supplied from non-designated sources in the United Kingdom in 1995 for use in scientific procedures were not ex-pets, strays or stolen. [1839]

Mr. George Howarth: The provenance was checked as far as possible and the legal owner's consent obtained in each case.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the acute lethal toxicity tests in Table 12, column 2 of the 1995 Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals in Great Britain were (1) LD50/LC50 tests, (2) other acute lethal tests and (3) sub-acute, repeat-dose lethal tests. [1739]

Mr. Howarth: Column 2 of table 12 reports aggregated totals by species for acute LD50, LC50 and other acute lethal tests. Licensees are not required to record in their statistical returns which of these tests they carried out. A breakdown into test type is therefore not centrally available. Sub-acute toxicity tests (which may include repeat dosages but which are not necessarily lethality tests) are recorded in column 5 of table 12.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many personal callers were there to the public inquiry desk at each branch of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate on 6 May. [1815]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: On 6 May, the number of applicants at the public enquiry offices of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate was:

	Number
Belfast	4
Birmingham	56
Croydon Public Enquiry Office	705
Croydon Asylum Screening Unit	328
Glasgow	24
Liverpool	31

Disability

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to adopt a social model of disability in framing all future and amending previous relevant legislation and guidance; and if he will make a statement. [1684]

Mr. Straw: My Department will be contributing to the consultations, including discussions about the definition of disability, referred to by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State at the Department for Education and Employment in his reply of 4 June, Official Report, column 190. It would not be appropriate to pre-judge the outcome of that work.

Immigration (Primary Purpose Rule)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of the primary purpose rule in immigration cases. [2625]

Mr. Straw: Following our manifesto commitment, we are acting to end the primary purpose rule because it is arbitrary, unfair and ineffective and has penalised genuine marriages, divided families and unnecessarily increased the administrative burden on the immigration system. The rule has also placed British citizens resident here at a disadvantage compared with other European Union nationals resident in Britain—to whom no primary purpose rule has applied.

Applicants under the rule had to prove a negative both before the entry clearance officer and on appeal. But, even where applicants lost their appeal, they would then be allowed in where there was a child with right of abode in the United Kingdom or where the marriage had lasted five years. It is also very doubtful that this inherently ineffective and unfair rule has worked to filter out those who sought to cheat the system. This question is not therefore about numbers, but about fairness.

I am determined to build an immigration and asylum system that is fairer, faster and firmer. Ending this rule will allow resources to be focused on the other requirements of the rules, which are known to be fair, effective and enforceable. These include:

first, showing that the marriage is genuine: the couple must intend to live together permanently as husband and wife: and the marriage must be subsisting. In other words, it must not be a marriage of convenience; secondly, both parties to the marriage must have met; and, thirdly, both parties must demonstrate that they can maintain and accommodate themselves and any dependants without recourse to public funds.

The burden of proof in these cases will remain on the applicant. In addition, couples will continue to be subject to a 12 month probationary period, at the end of which they must show again that their marriage is genuine. This will be firmly enforced.

An amendment to the Rules will be made today. Entry clearance officers are being instructed not to refuse entry clearance applications where the refusal depends solely on the primary purpose rule. Similar instructions are being issued to staff in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. Home Office Presenting Officers are being instructed not to oppose cases on appeal where the refusal was based wholly on the primary purpose rule and the rule will not apply to outstanding applications. However, if an appellant still decides to proceed on his own initiative, he will still have to prove his case to the adjudicator, even though the Presenting Officer will not formally oppose the appeal. Those who have had their case and their appeal refused will be entitled to apply again, on payment of an apppropriate fee.

DEFENCE

Arms Supplies (Central Africa)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what military equipment has been supplied to the central African region from companies in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the Isle of Man, (c) the Channel Islands and (d) other United Kingdom dependent territories in the last five years. [1054]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence does not hold details of military equipment supplied, other than those which are provided voluntarily by companies for the purposes of the annual return to the UN Arms Register; no exports to Zaire, Rwanda, Burundi, Central African Republic or Congo, have been included in the UK's return to the UN Register in the period 1992–96.

Details of export licences issued to companies seeking to supply controlled military goods to these countries are held by the DTI in respect of companies based in the United Kingdom and the Isle of Man. Details of export licences issued by the Channel Islands and UK dependent territories are held by the authorities there. This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The British Government have been fully committed to both the UN embargo imposed in May 1994 banning the supply of arms to Rwanda and the 1993 European Union embargo on the export of arms to Zaire. Press allegations were made in November 1996 that British companies might have been involved in the supply of arms to Rwandan extremists in 1994, but there was no evidence to suggest that arms had been exported from the UK. The Government established an inter-departmental committee to examine rigorously our procedures in relation to the trafficking in arms, to determine whether there had been a gap in our controls. A copy of the Committee's report was placed in the Library of the House in December last year.

Equipment Exhibition (Farnborough)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the countries from which buyers (a) have been and (b) will be invited to the Royal Navy and British Army Equipment Exhibition being held at Farnborough from 31 August to 5 September. [1766]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 2 June 1997]: The purpose of the Royal Navy and British Army Equipment Exhibition, which this year takes place jointly at Portsmouth and Farnborough, is to show a wide range of British defence equipment to representatives of countries with whom we have friendly relations. The equipment on display ranges from British built ships at one end of the scale to such items as communications equipment and Air Defence Radar at the other end of the scale.

The Government takes seriously its commitment to Article 51 of the United Nations charter which affirms the right of nations to self defence. Export licences for equipment on display will, however, be granted only on a case by case basis where the Government is satisfied that such equipment will be used neither for external aggression nor for internal repression. The Government is currently reviewing the criteria under which export licences will be issued.

The following countries have been invited to send delegations to RNBAEE 97:

Australia

Animal Experimentation

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those of his Department's establishments at which animal experiments are conducted indicating how many animal experiments were conducted at each in each year since 1993. [1876]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. John Spellar, dated 5 June 1997:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about those of his department's establishments at which animal experiments are conducted indicating how many animal experiments were conducted at each in each year since 1993 as the matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA).

Two DERA sites currently conduct animal experiments, Porton Down and Alverstoke. In 1993 the former RAF Institute of Aviation Medicine based at Farnborough, concluded a programme of work with animals. The number of animal experiments conducted at each in each calendar year since 1993 are in the table below.

	Porton Down	Alverstoke	IAM	Total
1993	6,697	166	12	6,875
1994	7,416	238	—	7,654
1995	8,747	167	—	8,914
1996	11,097	124	—	11,221

In answering this question we have discovered a small statistical error in the numbers quoted for 1993 in a previous answer to you in 1995 (PQ 5852). The number quoted above is the correct figure and I can only apologise for the earlier error. For ease of reference the above number for 1993 is 79 greater than the one given earlier.

Asbestos-related Diseases

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to review the legislation relating to claims by former service personnel for compensation for asbestos-related diseases contracted before 1987. [1895]

Dr. John Reid: I have no plans to review the legislation regarding the entitlement of Service personnel to common law compensation from my Department for injuries received before 1987.

National Service

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to introduce an official award for national service; and if he will make a statement. [2140]

Mr. Spellar: National servicemen were eligible to receive the full range of campaign stars and medals available to the Armed Forces, subject to individual qualification.

Service between 1939 and 1945 was recognised by the 1939–45 Star, 1939–45 War Medal, the Defence Medal and the Campaign Stars for the various campaigns in which they served.

Similarly, servicemen called up between 1946 and 1963 were eligible for the various clasps to the General Service Medal for the operations in which they served for example, Palestine, Malaya or Cyprus, and those who served in Korea were also eligible for the campaign medal and the United Nations Service Medal Korea.

There are no plans to institute any additional awards for service during the above periods.

HMS Ark Royal

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy that HMS Ark Royal is refitted at Rosyth. [1881]

Dr. John Reid: I can confirm that HMS Ark Royal is included in the programme of surface ship refitting which, subject to satisfactory price and contractual agreement, has been allocated to Babcock Rosyth Defence Limited as part of the recent privatisation of Rosyth Royal Dockyard.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

ENVIRONMENT AND THE REGIONS

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if intermediate level wastes arising from the reprocessing of nuclear fuel from overseas will be retained in the United Kingdom; [1780]

(2) what plans he has to commission research into a long-term management proposal for radioactive wastes which incorporates retrievability. [1786]

Mr. Meacher: The Government is considering implications for radioactive waste management policy of the former Secretary of State's dismissal of the United Kingdom Nirex Ltd.'s appeal against refusal of planning permission for a Rock Characterisation Facility at Sellafield. These include the return to the country of origin of intermediate-level waste generated by reprocessing of foreign spent fuel.

The previous Government's policy of "waste substitution" required BNFL to return intermediate-level waste to its foreign reprocessing customers (rather than a much smaller volume but radiologically equivalent amount of high-level waste) should the Nirex repository not be established by the time BNFL is contractually obliged to return the waste—i.e. 25 years after they are generated. It is unlikely that a repository could become operational within that timescale.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on Nirex's plan to establish a dump on the Stanford training area, Thetford. [1954]

Mr. Meacher: Following the dismissal of Nirex's appeal against refusal of planning permission for a Rock Characterisation Facility at Sellafield, I understand that Nirex has no plans to investigate any other sites.

MOX Fuel

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research capacity is available to the Environment Agency to evaluate the transmutation capacity of MOX fuel fabrication. [1784]

Mr. Meacher: Partitioning and transmutation of long lived radionuclides is under review internationally as a means of treating radioactive waste. A senior member of the Environment Agency is involved in a Nuclear Energy Agency working group which is assessing the potential of such techniques. The Department of the Environment is also maintaining a watching brief on international developments in this field.

Basking Sharks

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will apply in full Section V of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to basking sharks; and if he will make a statement. [2226]

Ms Angela Eagle: Public consultations on the Joint Nature Conservation Committee's recommendation that the basking shark be afforded full protection under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, and recommendations concerning 33 other species, took place between January and April. Responses received during the exercise are being considered.

It is premature to indicate if the basking shark will be afforded full protection until Ministers have considered all representations. Ministers hope to make a decision in the summer.

Rough Sleepers Initiative

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what funding decisions have been reached for the 12 areas offered assistance under the third phase of the rough sleepers initiative. [2187]

Ms Armstrong: The Government's aim is to ensure that there is no necessity for people to sleep rough. I am therefore delighted to announce £17.2 million funding under the Rough Sleepers Initiative and the Rough Sleepers Revenue Fund for voluntary sector organisations and housing associations in Bath, Bournemouth, Brighton, Cambridge, Ealing, Exeter, Leicester, Manchester, Nottingham, Oxford, Richmond upon Thames and West London, to alleviate the difficulties faced by people sleeping rough in those areas.

Temporary and permanent accommodation, including specialist accommodation for people suffering mental ill health and drink and drugs misuse problems, will be funded in Brighton and West London. Outreach and resettlement workers will be funded in all 12 areas, and organisations in some of the 12 areas will also receive funding for additional hostel staff.

I am also particularly pleased that the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health has confirmed that the Department of Health will be contributing nearly £3 million to the initiative. As part of the expansion of the Homeless Mentally Ill Initiative beyond central London, nearly £2 million will be allocated to local authorities over the next three years to provide extra services for people sleeping rough who have mental health problems; £2.5 million will be provided in 1997–98 under the Drug and Alcohol Specific Grant to 81 projects, with £740,000 of that going to 21 new projects providing services to people sleeping rough who have alcohol and drug misuse problems. The co-ordination of funding between the Departments of the Environment and Health will reinforce the partnership approach which is a key to the success of strategies to help people sleeping rough.

My Department and the Housing Corporation are writing today to each of the voluntary sector organisations and housing associations who submitted a bid for funding to let them know what decisions have been reached.

My Department, in conjunction with the Department of Health, has also written today to the relevant local authorities explaining the funding allocations in detail. The Government welcomes the part played by local authorities and voluntary sector organisations in preparing strategies aimed at tackling rough sleeping and in working up the bids for funding.

I have considered a number of proposals to increase staffing in existing hostels for people sleeping rough. It is clear that more thought needs to be given to the co-ordination of provision in some areas and I have decided, therefore, to invite the local authorities in Bath, Bournemouth, Cambridge, Ealing, Exeter, Nottingham, Oxford and Richmond upon Thames to work with local hostel providers to develop further proposals to ensure that provision meets the needs of people sleeping rough in those areas. There will be a further opportunity for organisations in those areas to apply for additional hostel staff later in the year.

Earlier this year, my Department produced guidance to enable local authorities to evaluate the extent of rough sleeping in their areas and develop strategies to ensure that there is no necessity for people to sleep rough. Ian Brady, deputy Chief Executive of Centrepoint, has been seconded to the Department to promote the guidance and encourage the development of local strategies. We will consider offering funding to support local strategies in further areas where major rough sleeping problems are identified. Mr. Brady is also chairing a Rough Sleepers Forum of homelessness charities to help co-ordinate national efforts to tackle rough sleeping.

A list of the schemes being offered funding today has been placed in the House library.

TRANSPORT

Manchester Airport (Environmental Protest)

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been the cost to public funds to date of the actions in respect of environmental activists opposing developments at Manchester Airport; and if he will make a statement. [2012]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The expense being incurred by the Under-Sheriff of Cheshire in removing the protesters from the site of the second runway at Manchester Airport is being met by the airport company and the contractors, without cost to public funds. The additional cost to Cheshire Constabulary of the policing operation at the site as at 17 April, the latest date for which information is available, was £111,000. The additional cost to Greater Manchester Police as at 30 May is estimated to be £274,000. There is in addition the cost of court hearings, although fees are payable towards that cost.

Integrated Transport Policy

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how he intends to take forward the Government's commitments to develop an integrated transport policy to fight congestion and pollution. [2626]

Mr. Prescott: Further to my replies to the House on Tuesday, I have today launched a fundamental review of transport policy to provide an integrated transport system which meets the environmental and transport needs of all regions of the country for today and the future. The review will look at both the short term and the longer term actions that are necessary to deliver an integrated system.

The review will encompass the key areas of transport and examine transport's relationship with the economy in general and with the many environmental issues which surround it. The review will be overseen by a Ministerial team drawn from both the Transport and Environmental Departments and chaired by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Transport. He and I are determined that this review will be conducted in an open and consultative way which will provide opportunity for those with an interest in transport to input their views to the process, and wherever possible, become directly involved in the development of policy.

My aim is to publish a long term strategy White Paper next Spring which will provide a sustainable framework for decision making during the remainder of this Parliament, the next and the years beyond that. Critically it will set interim objectives for the remainder of this Parliament, against which to judge our progress. Publication of the White Paper will mark the completion of the initial analytical, goal setting and consultation phase in the development of an integrated transport policy. But there will then be a rolling programme of action, involving both central and local government, transport operators and others across all regions to make that policy a reality.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animal Exports

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food where all the procedures performed by the local veterinary inspectors in connection with export health certification of the pigs exported from Dover on 15 May were carried out; if he will indicate whether these were places at which export health certification could properly be carried out under the terms of directive 64/432/EEC; how many of the pigs were (a) dead and (b) injured on arrival at Dover; and if he will place in the Library a copy of the report made by the member of his veterinary staff who accompanied the pigs on the sea crossing from Dover. [1272]

Mr. Morley: With the exception of one lorry load, the export health certification which accompanied the pigs on the sailing of the MV Caroline on 15 May was completed at their farms of origin in accordance with the rules laid down in Directive 64/432/EEC. In order to ensure the correct identity of the pigs transported, animal health certification for one lorry load was finalised at Dover. Two of the pigs transported to Dover were found to be dead on arrival. Two others were found to be unfit to continue their journey and were not exported. The appropriate local authorities are being asked to consider whether prosecution would be warranted in relation to any aspects of the consignments of 15 and 16 May.

I have seen the report of the veterinarian who accompanied the pigs on their journey. I do not propose to place it in the Library. As a general principle, it is important for the proper enforcement of the rules that frank and candid reports are available for discussion within government and between government and the enforcement authorities. Such reports may also be used as part of legal proceedings where there is evidence of non-compliance. These purposes would be undermined if the practice were to publish reports such as this. They are covered by exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, which enables the confidentiality of internal opinion, advice and recommendations to Ministers to be protected.

BSE

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he will take in the light of the EU Commission's statement that other member states are not taking enough precautions against risks of BSE in cattle or sheep and the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee's latest advice. [2624]

Dr. John Cunningham: In August 1996 the previous Government introduced a ban on the consumption of the heads of sheep and goats, following a recommendation from the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee which had considered whether BSE could exist naturally in sheep. The Committee had also advised that the Government should continue to consider this issue further with its EU partners and implement a programme of further research.

Discussions took place during the latter part of 1996 in the European Union. The Commission proposed EU-wide controls on the use of spleen of all sheep and the brain and spinal cord of sheep which were more than about a year old, based on checking the number of permanent incisor teeth of the sheep. Unfortunately, despite support from the United Kingdom and a few other countries, the majority of Member States rejected this proposal.

I have raised this issue again with Commissioners Fischler and Bonino. The Commission announced on 14 May that it would be making further proposals.

In the light of this SEAC have reconsidered the question. There is still no scientific evidence indicating that there is any BSE in the national sheep population. But SEAC has recommended that it would be prudent for the Government to take early action if Community-wide measures are not agreed quickly, to extend controls, as proposed by the European Commission, to the spinal cord of sheep more than a year old—which account for around a sixth of annual consumption of sheepmeat in the UK—and to the spleen of all sheep. Similar action has already been taken by the Irish, French and Dutch Governments. This is a precautionary measure, designed to ensure that if BSE has been transmitted to sheep, all reasonable steps are taken to avoid any possible risks to consumers no matter how remote.

On the basis of the advice from SEAC, which I am placing in the Library of the House, the Government is today opening consultations on legislation which would extend the existing controls on the heads of all sheep and goats to the spleen, and would require the removal of spinal cord of sheep and goats with at least one permanent incisor erupted (the most practical means of ageing sheep over one year old). It would also ban the use of the vertebral column of sheep and goats in the production of mechanically recovered meat.

The SEAC statement also recommends reinforcing the existing arrangements for scrapie surveillance. The Government's intention is to reinforce the existing legal requirement on farmers to notify all cases of scrapie by providing new powers for the compulsory slaughter of affected animals, with payment of compensation, and by initiating a survey of brains from abattoirs and a postal survey of farms. The results of these surveys will be published. We are today opening consultation on this compulsory slaughter and compensation scheme.

Research into the epidemiology of the disease in sheep and goats is now under way. The new measures will significantly aid this research by providing further incentives for reporting disease, and additional material for research. In addition sheep are currently being selected from New Zealand, one of the few countries generally accepted as being free of scrapie, for use in a number of key long-term experiments. These sheep will provide a valuable resource for future work on scrapie.

The SEAC statement also includes advice on imported cattle. SEAC have advised that action should be taken to extend specified bovine material (SBM) controls to imported central nervous system (CNS) tissues or bovine material containing them. At present the legal requirement for the heads, spinal cord and certain other tissues of cattle to be removed from the food and animal feed chain, prohibited for use in pharmaceutical, cosmetic and medical products and disposed of under controlled conditions, applies only to carcases of bovine animals which have died or been slaughtered in the United Kingdom. The Government is opening consultation on proposals which would mean that the requirement to remove and dispose of specified tissues would apply not only to such carcases but also to bovine material which has been imported into the UK.

Beef Premium Claims

Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action is being taken to recover overpayments of aid to beef producers based on premium claims in 1996. [2690]

Dr. John Cunningham: Regulation (EC) No.1357/96, the subject of Explanatory Memorandum 7811/96 of 3 June 1996, was cleared by the Select Committee on European Legislation on 5 June 1996 and adopted by the Council of Ministers on 8 July 1996. It contained a range of special measures to assist beef producers and included provision for supplementary payments to producers pro rata to their entitlement to subsidies under the Beef Special Premium and Suckler Cow Premium schemes in the 1996 scheme years. Provisional payments could however be based on 1995 claims so as to provide urgent financial support. At the time of payment if was made clear to producers that adjustment would follow to reflect the position relating to 1996 subsidy claims. Beef producers who are being paid these subsidies on fewer animals in 1996 than in 1995 will be required to repay the supplement relating to the difference in numbers. Wherever possible, such overpayments will be deducted from balance payments due under the 1996 beef schemes. All monies recovered under this exercise will be re-distributed to those beef producers who qualified for subsidies on more animals in the 1996 scheme years than in 1995.

SCOTLAND

Departmental Computer Systems

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to ensure that his Department's computer systems are millennium compliant; and if he will make a statement. [1242]

Mr. Dewar: A year 2000 project compliance programme is underway within The Scottish Office with the objective of identifying and ensuring the correct operation of all critical systems by 31 December 1998.

Disability

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to adopt a social model of disability in framing all future and amending previous relevant legislation and guidance; and if he will make a statement. [1676]

Mr. Galbraith: I refer the hon. Member to the Answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on 4 June 1997.

I will ensure that the views of disability organisations in Scotland are sought during the consultation process and that policies, including the definition of disability, are developed in partnership with interested parties.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the value of hill livestock compensatory allowance payments (a) in the last financial year and (b) in 1993. [1372]

Mr. Chisholm: The total value of Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance (HLCA) payments made in Scotland for (a) and (b) above was as follows:

Total expenditure

	£ million
(a) 1996–97 financial year	40.131
(b) 1993 calendar year	50.862

The values of HLCA headage payment rates in each of the scheme years which relate to the 1993 calendar year and the 1996–97 financial year are as follows:

Highlands and Islands University

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what initiatives he plans to progress the development of a Highlands and Islands university; and what funding will be given by the Scottish Office. [1373]

Mr. Wilson: Good progress has already been made towards the creation of a University of the Highlands and Islands. Planned provision for the UHI Project in 1997–98 is £5 million. This is in addition to the £1.3 million which was made available last year. I shall keep under review the general requirements for the Project in future taking account of any implications arising from the report of the Dearing Committee on Higher Education when it is published.

Consultant Post Vacancies

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many vacancies for consultants there are in the NHS in Scotland; how many of these posts have been vacant for six months or more; and if he will indicate these per NHS trust. [1374]

New Homes (Energy Rating)

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has, and over what time scale, to include in the Building Standards Scotland Regulations a standard assessment procedure for the energy rating of new homes. [2094]

Mr. Chisholm: The Scottish Office Development Department is preparing amendments to the Building Standards Regulations which will include a revision of Part J, Conservation of Fuel and Power. The revision will require the Government standard assessment procedure energy rating to be calculated for all new dwellings and for all dwellings created by conversion. The amending Statutory Instrument will be laid in July or August to come into force three months later.

Ivermectin (Salmon Farms)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many salmon farms in Scotland have (a) applied and (b) been granted licences to treat their fish with ivermectin; and if he will make a statement. [2120]

Mr. Chisholm: I understand from the Scottish Environment Protection Agency that 64 salmon farms have applied for discharge consents in respect of the use of ivermectin. Sixteen consents have been granted, 15 of which are in operation.

A further 19 consents await a decision by my right hon. Friend on whether to call them in for his own determination as provided for under the Control of Pollution Act 1974.

Local Authority Capping

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to cap any Scottish local authorities in 1997. [2524]

Mr. Dewar: No. All Scottish local authorities have set budgets for 1997–98 at or below the expenditure limits implied by the provisional capping principles which the previous government announced in conjunction with the 1997–98 local government finance settlement.

Water Quangos

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for the future of the water quangos in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [579]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 22 May 1997]: The Government is committed to returning the Scottish water authorities to local democratic control. A key consideration in taking this forward will be to ensure, in the light of our Manifesto commitment, that we fully observe both the letter and the spirit of the Nolan Committee's recommended procedures for making appointments to public bodies. We shall introduce change at a sensible pace which does not destabilise the recently constituted water authorities.

I have held discussions with the three current water authority chairmen. Each one of them has told me that he is willing to work closely with the new Government to achieve our objectives. I have therefore told them that I am happy for them to continue to serve until the end of 1997, and that I shall then re-examine the position.

The terms of appointment of roughly half of the present members of the water authorities come to an end on 30 June 1997. I intend, as an immediate first step, to advertise in accordance with the Nolan procedures for new members. We shall then consider those democratically elected local representatives who apply, as well as suitable candidates from other fields, including those current members whose appointments are coming to an end. Overall, I envisage a significant shift in the balance of board membership. The advertisement will make clear that applicants may also be considered for positions as chairmen.

To ensure the water authorities are able to operate effectively in the interim period while the Nolan procedures are being carried through, we shall invite members due to leave at the end of 30 June to accept re-appointment for a further six months to the end of the calendar year. The new appointments will then run from 1 January 1998.

I have asked my officials to conduct a review during this interim six month period of the further steps I might take to strengthen local democratic control. The review will consider a wide range of options for the water authorities. It will also consider any possible implications for the Scottish Water and Sewerage Customers Council.

I have asked my officials to consult extensively with all interested parties, including COSLA, the water authorities themselves, and the Scottish Water and Sewerage Customers Council. I have asked them to report to me in November.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Competition Law

17. Mr. Miller: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government policy on reform of the United Kingdom's framework of competition law. [671]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The Government's policy is to make competition law more efficient and effective. We intend to introduce a Competition Bill this Autumn which will bring in a tough prohibitive approach to deal with anti-competitive agreements and abuse of market power.

Small Businesses

18. Mr. Streeter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she plans to take to assist small businesses in the west country. [672]

Mrs. Roche: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend for Bradford, West (Mr. Singh).

In addition, small businesses are a very important part of the economy of the west country.

25. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to assist small businesses. [680]

Mrs. Roche: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend for Bradford, West (Mr. Singh).

26. Mr. Hanson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions she proposes to undertake with the Federation of Small Businesses regarding her proposals on statutory interest on late payments. [681]

Mrs. Roche: I intend to have regular contact with all the small firms representative bodies including the Federation of Small Businesses. We will be consulting on the form of legislation for a Statutory Right to Interest in the summer. The Federation of Small Businesses will be invited to submit their views.

32. Mr. Page: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many organisations representing small firms indicated to her Department whether they are (a) for or (b) against a statutory right of interest in the recent consultation exercise. [689]

Mrs. Roche: Fifty-four representative organisations, who will have small firms in their membership, responded to the 1996 review. Of these representative organisations 22 were in favour of a Statutory Right to Interest and 32 were against.

It is clear that late payment continues to cause concern to small firms. A number of business surveys consistently show that a majority of small firms support legislation for a Statutory Right to Interest. A recent NOP survey in fact found that 80 per cent. of UK firms supported such legislation. It is in direct response to the committing concerns of small businesses that the Government will introduce the Fair Payment of Commercial Debts Bill.

Airbus Project

19. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions her Department has had with representatives of (a) British Aerospace and (b) other aircraft manufacturing companies relating to the possibility of financial aid from Her Majesty's Government towards the Airbus 3XX project. [673]

Mr. Battle: The Department is in regular contact with British Aerospace and other UK aerospace companies on a range of issues including new product strategy. We have not, however, received any formal application for finance for the A3XX project.

Minimum Wage

20. Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans her Department has to introduce a national minimum wage. [674]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Gracious Speech set out the Government's intention to bring forward legislation for the introduction of a national minimum wage. We are already moving to set up an independent Low Pay Commission to advise the Government on the level at which the minimum wage might be introduced.

33. Mr. Amess: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations she has received on the likely effects of the minimum wage and social chapter on Britain's trading prospects. [690]

Mr. McCartney: I have received a number of representations on the minimum wage and social chapter. Employers in every industrial sector support the principle of a national minimum wage. By rejecting an "empty chair" policy on the social chapter, we will enable the UK to use its influence to ensure that European measures promote labour market flexibility and maximise employability.

Industrial Investment (Yorkshire)

21. Mr. Bayley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she is taking to promote industrial investment in Yorkshire. [676]

Mrs. Beckett: My Department has a range of initiatives designed to encourage industrial investment in Yorkshire. These include Regional Selective Assistance, Regional Enterprise Grants and European Structural Funds.

Trading Agreements (Social Clause)

22. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made with regard to the possible incorporation of a social clause within future trading agreements; and if she will make a statement. [677]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government is firmly committed to using its best endeavours to eliminate abusive labour practices around the world. We will use every opportunity in the ILO and elsewhere to promote this objective, and we will also explore how the processes of the WTO can reinforce this objective.

European Union

23. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures the Government intend taking to improve the competitive position of British companies within the European Union. [678]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The Government will work in partnership with business to improve the country's competitiveness. We intend to drive forward progress on the Single Market during our Presidency of the European Union next year to give British Companies better opportunities to sell their products and services throughout Europe.

Regional Aid

24. Mr. McAllion: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to review regional aid policies. [679]

Mrs. Roche: The Government is currently considering a range of measures to improve regional aid policies. These include: legislation on Regional Development Agencies; the introduction of Regional Chambers and a review of the incentives and support the Government provides to smaller firms.

34. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to review the system of regional development assistance. [691]

Mrs. Roche: The Government is currently considering a number of proposals to improve regional development assistance including requests for a review of Assisted Areas Map. We will announce the extent and nature of any review when we have looked at this issue more closely.

30. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals she has for further review of the Assisted Areas Map. [687]

Mrs. Roche: The Government is considering whether the 1993 Assisted Areas Map needs to be changed and will carry out a review as needed. We will announce the extend and nature of any review when we have looked at this issue more closely.

Export Controls

27. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when her Department proposes to publish the results of the consultation on strategic export controls of October 1996; and if she will make a statement. [682]

Mrs. Beckett: Copies of the responses to the consultation (with the exception of two for which confidentiality was requested) were placed in the libraries of both Houses in February of this year. Copies of these responses were also placed at that time in the library of my Department where members of the public could arrange to see them. In addition, I have now arranged for copies to be made available on request from my Department's Export Control Organisation.

We are considering all the responses carefully in formulating our proposals which will be announced in due course.

Inward Investment

28. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the advantages of membership of the European Union for the attraction of inward investment. [683]

Mrs. Beckett: The UK's place in the European Single Market of 370 million consumers is central to our success in attracting inward investment.

Aerospace Industry

29. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she is taking to (a) support and (b) encourage the development of the aerospace industry in the north-west. [684]

Mr. Battle: The department supports and encourages the development of the aerospace industry through its wide-ranging sponsorship activity. In the north west we work closely with the Consortium of Lancashire Aerospace (CLA), which has secured funding under the Konver scheme. Funds have also been made available to the aerospace sector in the region through the Single Regeneration Budget scheme, Managing in the 90s and through the work of the local TECs.

36. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her policy on launch aid for companies engaged in the aerospace industry. [694]

Mr. Battle: The launch aid scheme has demonstrated its value, and the Government will consider fully any applications for launch aid on their merits.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

31. Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the progress of the liquidation of BCCI. [688]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: I am due to meet my hon. Friend shortly to discuss the progress of the liquidation of BCCI. I note that a first dividend of 24.5 pence in the pound was paid to creditors in December 1996 and I understand that the delay in paying that dividend was caused by the need to settle a number of legal actions in the UK and in foreign jurisdictions. I hope that the liquidators will be able to complete their work with as much speed as possible so that creditors may receive a further, substantial dividend at an early date.

Public Utilities (Regulation)

35. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals she has to strengthen the role of consumers in the regulation of public utilities. [693]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: In the Government's view utility regulation must be open and predictable, and fair to consumers.

Offshore Oil Technology and Supply Office

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if she will make a statement on the promotions budget for the offshore oil technology and supply office; [1011]

(2) how her Department's oil and gas technology and promotion budget is to be allocated. [1007]

Mr. Battle: The oil and gas technology and promotion budget is handled by the Oil, gas and petrochemicals Supplies Office (OSO). For 1997–98 OSO has a gross programme budget of £3.7 million, as set out in the Supply Estimates. The precise allocation of funds is subject to advice from the OSO Board, but is expected to be £1.5 million for export promotion—including trade fairs, missions and seminars; and £2.2 million to aid competitiveness—including assistance for the Centre for Marine and Petroleum Technology (CMPT), the CRINE Network competitiveness initiative and some technology projects.

Export Companies

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the impact on exporting companies of an interest rate rise. [686]

Mrs. Roche: I do not think it appropriate for me to speculate on the future course of interest rates. Interest rates are to be set by the Bank of England to meet the Government's inflation target.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proportion of lottery proceeds has been distributed to each region to date. [801]

Mr. Chris Smith: The distribution of Lottery funds by region to date is set out in the following table:

Region/country	Total percentage[1]
London: National bodies[2]	14
London: Regional bodies	10
North-west	9
North-east	4
Yorkshire and Humberside	6
Eastern	7
East Midlands	4
West Midlands	8
South-west	8
South-east	8
Merseyside	2
Scotland	11
Wales	6
Northern Ireland	2
UK wide	1

[1] Rounded to the nearest percentage.

[2] Awards to bodies based in London include many to institutions that are of national importance and are of benefit to the country as a whole. These are therefore identified separately.

Churchill Papers

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps he is taking to ensure that access to the papers in the Churchill archive is not restricted. [2080]

Mr. Fisher: Access to the Churchill papers purchased in 1995 by the National Heritage Memorial Fund, and now at the Churchill Archive Centre in Cambridge, is not restricted. There are other sets of papers stored in the Centre, but these are not part of the papers purchased in 1995 and are therefore there on different terms.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will establish a review of the adequacy of the current levels of incapacity benefit. [859]

Mr. Denham: As part of the Government's aim of creating a modern welfare system we will seek to ensure that people who are too sick to work are provided with appropriate support. We also wish to do more to enable those who are able and wish to get back into work to do so.

Income Support (Pensioners)

Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the proportion of pensioners who do not claim the income support to which they are entitled. [966]

Mr. Denham: The latest available figures show that in 1994–95 between 34 per cent. and 41 per cent. of pensioners entitled to income support were not taking up their benefit. We want to get help to Britain's poorest pensioners and are commissioning research to establish why they do not claim the income support which is their due.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were in receipt of income support in Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale, in each year since 1992. [266]

Mr. Bradley: The administration of Income Support is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Gordon Prentice, dated 4 June 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many people were in receipt of Income Support (IS) in Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale in each year since 1992.

The number of people in receipt of IS for the Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale District since 1992 are:

February 1992: 22,002

February 1993: 25,162

February 1994: 24,744

February 1995: 25,153

February 1996: 24,944

February 1997: 20,692

Figures are provisional and subject to amendment.

The data provided is the latest available and relates to the actual number of people in receipt of IS on the last working day of February each year since 1992. The data for February 1997 does not include unemployed customers who now receive Jobseeker's Allowance.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Pension Sharing

Ms Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to introduce pension sharing for divorcing couples. [2523]

Ms Harman: We will introduce pension sharing for divorcing couples. This is an important step towards meeting the Government's objectives of improving the income of women in retirement.

It is the combination of the Basic State Pension and a decent second pension which prevents people from retiring into poverty. But women are less likely than men to have a good second pension.

Women are less likely than men to belong to an occupational pension scheme—in 1991 only 3.9 million women belonged to an occupational pension scheme, compared with 6.8 million men.

Women's occupational pensions are worth less on average than men's: women aged 65–69 have an average income from occupational pensions of just £22 a week, compared with £67 a week for men.

Women are less likely to have a personal pension: only 22 per cent. of women who work full-time have a personal pension, compared with 28 per cent. of men.

As a result, women are more likely than men to be poor in retirement:

Seventy per cent. of the 2 million people over the age of 60 who depend on Income Support are women.

Around three-quarters of the 1 million pensioners who do not claim the Income Support to which they are entitled—and who lose on average £14 a week—are women.

Women are less likely to have a good second pension because they are more likely to be in part-time or low-paid work, and they are more likely to interrupt their working lives to care for their families.

Women make a vital contribution to the family income by bringing up children or caring for an elderly relative. On divorce, this contribution must be recognised, and where appropriate, pension rights shared.

It is not currently possible to share pension rights between men and women. Under the current arrangements, maintenance payments can be made from one spouse to another—we expect usually from husband to wife—once the pension is in payment. But these payments can stop on the death of the pension scheme member, and a former spouse who re-marries could lose their share of the pension. In addition, these arrangements mean that a financial break between the spouses is not achieved; ties between them remain throughout their retirement.

Our proposals will lead to fairer treatment of pensions in financial settlements between divorcing couples and will provide a better and more secure income in retirement for those receiving a share of pension rights.

We will be working in partnership with the pensions industry, family lawyers and others to deliver pension sharing arrangements by April 2000. In order to do this, we will be producing a draft Bill in this session for consultation with interested parties, before we introduce it to Parliament.

This will be the first time that my Department has adopted the approach of consulting on a draft bill, and confirms our commitment to deliver practical, workable and effective measures based on sound legislation.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Stability Pact

Mr. Cash: To ask the President of the Council what plans she has to ensure the parliamentary scrutiny of the stability pact. [1956]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The debate on Europe on Monday 9 June will provide the House with the opportunity to debate and vote on the stability pact proposals.

HEALTH

Dental Services

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many schemes have been selected for grants under the general dental service access fund up to the most recent date available; what has been the total cost of the schemes; to which local health authorities the grants are related; and what amounts are involved. [1889]

Mr. Milburn: Payments from the dental access fund totalling £798,000 were paid to 22 health authorities in the 1996–97 financial year. The table shows the names of the health authorities and the amounts paid to each.

Blood Processing (Liverpool)

Ms Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the clinical implications of the National Blood Authority's proposal to cease blood processing in Liverpool in relation to hospital and domiciliary services; which hospitals are served by the Liverpool centre; and if he will make a statement. [1571]

Ms Jowell: The transfer of bulk testing and processing work from the Liverpool to the Manchester Blood Centre is part of the National Blood Authority's major reorganisation programme designed to improve the safety, efficiency and reliability of the Blood Service. The transfer will be carefully monitored to ensure that clinical services to hospitals will not be adversely affected.

The hospitals served by the Liverpool blood centre are Alder Hey Children's, Arrowe Park, Broadgreen, Countess of Chester, Fazakerly, Glan Clwyd, Gwynedd, Maelor, Nobles, Ormskirk, Royal Liverpool, St. Helens, Southport, Walton, Warrington and Whiston. The Liverpool centre will continue to supply those hospitals with blood and to provide them with specialist services.

The plans to reorganise the service were announced in November 1995 after a wide-ranging lengthy and in parts contentious consultation exercise. Implementation of the reorganisation programme, which is being phased to tie in with the introduction of a new national computer system was already well advanced under the previous administration. However, in the light of recent representations on this matter, I have agreed to meet hon. Members from the Liverpool area to discuss, and hopefully resolve, their concerns about the change.

Radiography

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to investigate the totals and percentages of the instances of harmful effects from radiography treatment. [1958]

Mr. Boateng: We have no plans currently to collect centrally, information on those who have suffered adverse effects following radiotherapy treatment, although we are keeping these issues under review. It is more appropriate for monitoring to be undertaken at a local level where local problems can be identified. Cancer centres are expected to audit their results, including adverse effects.

The following action has been taken to help women with damage as a result of radiotherapy for breast cancer.

In May 1994 the Department issued guidance entitled "Quality Assurance in Radiotherapy—A Quality Management System for Radiotherapy".

The Royal College of Radiologists at the Department's request, convened a small group of professionals and lay people in Autumn 1994 to consider guidelines for care of women who have suffered tissue damage following radiotherapy for breast cancer. This report was issued to the NHS by the Department in October 1995.

The Royal College of Radiologists carried out a confidential clinical review of 126 women who had suffered injury following radiotherapy treatment for breast cancer at 15 centres in the period 1980–1993. The report makes recommendations on the management of breast cancer, particularly on radiotherapy, and for further research.

With regard to those suffering adverse effects following pelvic radiotherapy for gynaecological cancers, in 1996, a Working Group, which includes representatives from a number of Royal Colleges, voluntary organisations and the Department, was set up to consider the preparation of patient information leaflets concerning possible adverse effects following pelvic radiotherapy and to raise awareness generally. A sub-group is also considering issuing guidelines for health professionals on the care of women suffering adverse effects as a result of pelvic radiotherapy.

Dementia

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ensure that the needs of people with dementia and their carers are reflected in the membership and terms of reference of the Royal Commission on long-term care; and if he will make a statement. [2093]

Mr. Boateng: The Government intend to examine in detail, as heralded in our manifesto, provisions for long-term care of the elderly. We will make a further statement on this once the form of that examination and its content have been settled.

HIV/AIDS

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to provide additional resources to fund combination therapies for prisoners with HIV/AIDS. [1156]

Ms Jowell: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

English and French Children

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment his Department has made of reports of the disparity between English and French children in their understanding of ethical concepts and of the forces underlying social coherence; and if he will make a statement about the contribution of the study of philosophy in this respect. [1887]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department is aware of the Quest Project investigating the attitudes of primary age pupils in England and France. As part of its ongoing responsibility to keep the school curriculum under review, the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority (SCAA) is involved in a project investigating the relationship between the school curriculum and pupils' national identity in a small group of European countries.

Primary Class Sizes

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what range of estimates his Department has made for (a) 1998–99, (b) 1999–00 and (c) 2000-01 of the costs of ensuring that no five to seven-year-old in England and Wales is educated in a class of more than 30 children; and if he will make available the relevant background papers. [2213]

Mr. Byers: We will be discussing with LEAs and others the implementation of our policy on class sizes following publication of a White Paper this summer.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to review the methods of calculating (a) class sizes and (b) pupil-teacher ratios in primary schools. [1924]

Mr. Byers: None.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the number of extra primary teachers which would be necessary to reduce class sizes for five, six and seven-year-olds to below 30 without increasing class sizes for older children. [1938]

Mr. Byers: We shall be discussing with local authorities the detailed implementation of our policy to reduce class sizes for five, six and seven year olds.

Head Teachers (Primary Schools)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to increase the proportion of class contact time by primary school head-teachers. [1952]

Mr. Byers: It is already a professional duty of head teachers to participate, to such extent as may be appropriate having regard to their other duties, in the teaching of pupils, including the provision of cover for absent teachers. The Government has no plans to ask the School Teachers' Review Body to recommend any amendment to that professional duty.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many applications to the Funding Agency for Schools for capital allocations for nursery provision in grant-maintained schools (a) have been made, (b) have been approved, (c) have been rejected and (d) are still under consideration; and if he will list the applications in each category. [2149]

Mr. Byers: These matters are the responsibility of the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the Chairman of the Funding Agency to write to the hon. Member with this information.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the change to the pupil:teacher ratio in secondary schools resulting from the abolition of the assisted places scheme. [1946]

Mr. Byers: The Education (Schools) Bill allows for the phasing out of the assisted places scheme. There will be little if any change in the pupil:teacher ratio in secondary schools as a result of the phasing out of the scheme.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the number of extra primary teachers to be provided from the abolition of the assisted places scheme in each financial year from 1997–98 to 2001–02. [1947]

Mr. Byers: We intend to use the savings from the Assisted Places Scheme to fund the reduction in infant class sizes. It will be for individual LEAs to judge what adjustments will be needed to primary teacher numbers to ensure smaller classes.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the amount of money available for education from the abolition of the assisted places scheme in each financial year from 1997–98 to 2001–02, net of the costs of educating within the state sector those pupils who would otherwise have been within the assisted places scheme. [1948]

Mr. Byers: The previous Government's published expenditure plans for the assisted places scheme in England for the years 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000 are £140 million, £160 million and £180 million respectively. The Education (Schools) Bill currently before Parliament provides for no new assisted places to be awarded after the start of academic year 1997–98 and savings will therefore begin to accrue in financial year 1998–99. The Government's spending plans for 1998–99 onwards will be announced in due course and will take account of the savings progressively released from phasing out the scheme. Those savings will amount to about £100 million in total by the year 2000. There will be no significant additional burden on Local Education Authorities from educating children who would otherwise have entered the assisted places scheme search year.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children will leave an assisted place at the end of each academic year up to 2001. [1949]

Mr. Byers: We estimate that nearly 5,000 assisted place holders will leave their schools at the end of the current academic year 1996–97 and a similar number will leave in 1997–98. The numbers leaving in future years will depend on the number of entry places taken up, for the last time, in September 1997 and are likely to increase as previous years' entry cohorts move up through the school and then leave. It is our intention that the scheme will be phased out over the seven years to 2004.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children will continue to hold an assisted place after the scheme has been ended in each year up to 2004; and at what cost to the public purse. [1950]

Mr. Byers: There are some 33,140 assisted pupils in England in the current academic year 1996–97 and we expect that around 38,000 children will hold assisted places in academic year 1997–98. The number of assisted place holders from 1998–99 onwards will depend on the number of entry places taken up, for the last time, this coming September and will reduce year on year until the last pupil leaves in academic year 2003–04.

Current plans, already announced, for expenditure on the assisted places scheme in financial year 1997–98 amount to £140 million. Provision for 1998–99 will be reviewed in the light of our commitment to phase out the scheme while allowing existing assisted place holders to continue their education a participating schools.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the numbers of independent schools whose viability depends upon the assisted places scheme. [1953]

Mr. Byers: Less than one in seven pupils, on average, at schools participating in the scheme currently hold assisted places. The phasing out of the scheme will have no significant effect on schools' viability overall. Participating schools themselves have made alternative arrangements for supporting some pupils and many will have no difficulty in filling other places with full fee-payers.

Music and Ballet Scheme

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average cost of a place under the music and ballet scheme; how many children currently hold places; and what was the total cost of the scheme in the last year for which figures are available. [1951]

Mr. Byers: In the current academic year 1996–97 there are 644 children aided under the music and ballet scheme at an average cost of £13,858 per pupil. The cost includes boarding provision and intensive specialist tuition and training. The total cost of the scheme in financial year 1996–97 was £7.9 million.

Teaching Staff

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) qualified teachers and (b) classroom assistants in (i) state primary and (ii) state secondary schools there were in each year since 1987. [2024]

Ms Estelle Morris: The available information is shown in the following table.

Disability

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will establish a statutory commission for disabled people. [2171]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Our manifesto commits us to establishing "comprehensive, enforceable civil rights" for disabled people. We are consulting interested parties on the best way to achieve this and we shall develop proposals in the light of our discussions. The creation of a commission with enforcement powers will be central to those considerations.

WALES

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the assisted places scheme. [634]

Mr. Hain: The Education (Schools) Bill provides for the abolition of the Assisted Places Scheme after the September 1997 intake of pupils. Children in the scheme, or joining in September 1997, will be allowed to complete their primary or secondary education.

Wrexham to Bidston Line

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with Regional Railways North West concerning enhanced services for the Wrexham to Bidston railway line. [1262]

Mr. Hain: None. The franchise operator for the Regional Railways North West franchise is contractually required to provide a minimum level of service as specified by the Franchising Director in the Passenger Service Requirement for the franchise. Subject to Railtrack's agreement, the franchise operator may operate services other than those specified, if he desires to do so.

Repair and Improvement Grants

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate his Department has made of the number of repair and improvement grants outstanding for more than (a) one year and (b) two years in each (i) county and (ii) county borough in Wales. [1229]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Information in the form requested is not held centrally but the following table shows the numbers of renovation grant applications (under the 1989 Local Government and Housing Act) awaiting determination at the end of December 1996. From 17 December 1996, grants for home renovation are available under the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996.

Unemployment

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate his Department has made of the number of people who are unemployed but not claiming benefit in Wales. [1236]

Mr. Hain: According to the autumn 1996 Labour Force Survey, an estimated 50,000 people in Wales were unemployed on the International Labour Organisation (ILO) definition (that is they were without a paid job and were available to start work within the next two weeks and had either looked for work in the past four weeks or were waiting to start a job already obtained) but not reporting receipt of unemployment-related benefit.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate his Department has made of the latest number of people on Government employment and training schemes who are not registered as unemployed. [1237]

Mr. Hain: People on government training schemes are not registered as unemployed. The information contained in the following table shows the total number of trainees in Wales in training and those who have employed status (i.e. have a contract of employment). The figures quoted are provisional.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has responsibility for employment schemes in Wales.

Note:
Figures do not include trainees whose training is supported under local initiatives by Training and Enterprise Councils since this information is not collected centrally.

Class Sizes

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to provide additional funding to (a) retain teachers and (b) reduce class sizes; and if he will make a statement. [1256]

Mr. Hain: Local authorities have the discretion to decide how much of their available resources to allocate to individual services, such as education. Staffing levels in individual schools are then a matter for the governing body. The Education (Schools) Bill which had its second reading on 2 June phases out the Assisted Places Scheme leaving the way open to use resources to cut class sizes for 5, 6 and 7 year olds to 30 or under. We will be consulting shortly on proposals.

Derelict Land

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will institute a central register of derelict land. [1260]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The Welsh Development Agency already maintains, in conjunction with local authorities, comprehensive information on derelict sites throughout Wales. This information is available from the Agency or the relevant local authority on request.

Holyhead to Crewe Line

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to assist the electrification of the Holyhead to Crewe railway line. [1261]

Mr. Hain: The Government has no plans for the electrification of the Crewe to Holyhead railway line, but Railtrack are taking forward a strategy for improvements on the Crewe to Bangor section of the route which will increase line speeds to 161 kph.

Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning his policy for encouraging industry in Wales. [1298]

Mr. Hain: Nationally, we aim to create a stable macro-economic environment with low and stable inflation, and a flexible and better-trained workforce. Together with our plans to co-ordinate the economic development agencies into an Economic Powerhouse for Wales, this will improve the productivity and investment performance of industry throughout Wales.

Buses

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the level of service provided by buses in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [1302]

Mr. Hain: In the past ten years or so, there has been a marked increase in the number of vehicle kilometres operated by local bus services in Wales, although during the same period the number of local passenger journeys has declined in Wales as throughout Britain.

The Government is keen to reverse the decline in passenger journeys and will be pursuing a range of policies to encourage the greater use of public transport, including local bus services.

Incapacity

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate his Department has made of the number of (a) men and (b) women of working age who are incapacitated by long-term sickness or invalidity. [1230]

Mr. Win Griffiths: In the 1995 Welsh Health Survey 26 per cent. of men and 20 per cent. of women of working age who replied considered that they had a long-term illness, health problem, or handicap which limited their daily activities for the work they could do.

Disused Railway Lines

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how he proposes to encourage dedicated bus routes on disused railway lines with particular reference to the Shotton Steelworks to Mickle Trafford Railtrack. [1300]

Mr. Hain: Planning Policy Guidance encourages local authorities in Wales to promote public transport, including improved facilities to make bus services more attractive. It also encourages them to ensure that disused railway lines are not severed by piecemeal development if there is a realistic prospect of their use for transport purposes in the future.

I understand that Flintshire County Council are developing proposals to convert into a guided busway the disused railway line which runs from Mickle Trafford into Deeside, and I stand ready to consider any substantive proposals for support which the County Council may bring forward.

Beef Farms

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many farmers he estimates are engaged in beef production in Wales. [1304]

Mr. Win Griffiths: There were 13,600 whole-time and part-time farmers, partners and directors working on farms which had cattle in the beef breeding herd at 3 June 1996.

Source: June 1996 Agricultural and Horticultural Census.

Right to Roam

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy concerning the right to roam in Wales. [1308]

Mr. Win Griffiths: In our election manifesto we made it clear that our policies for the countryside include greater freedom for people to explore our open countryside. The Government is presently considering options for giving effect to this.

Index of Socio-economic Conditions

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what assessment he has made of poverty and deprivation levels in Wales; which indicators were used in making the assessment; and if he will publish the data and his assessment of it; [1545]

(2) if he will make it his policy to compile and publish an equivalent for Wales of the Department of the Environment Index of Local Conditions. [1544]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The Department publishes an Index of Socio-economic Conditions for each Unitary Authority in Wales, based mainly on 1991 Census data, which is similar to the Department of the Environment's Index of Local Conditions. Officials are currently discussing possible improvements to the Welsh Office Index, including ways of updating it, with officers from Welsh local authorities. A copy of the Welsh Office Index, including an explanatory note listing the factors used, has been placed in the Library.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what studies he has undertaken of the allocation levels to first wave general practitioner fundholders relative to those in subsequent waves and its impact on the practices over the whole period 1991 to 1997; and if he will make a statement. [2223]

Mr. Ron Davies: I have not commissioned any such studies. The allocation process is a matter of local determination between a health authority and the fundholders in its area. My responsibilities are to establish the policy framework and should local agreement not be achieved to arbitrate at the request of the parties. As no formal requests have been made there is no need to commission a study at this time.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Bro Taf health authority regarding (a) the allocation of funds to general practitioner fundholders, (b) monitoring of expenditure relative to the allocation and (c) sanctions in the case of overspending; and if he will make a statement. [2224]

Mr. Davies: I have not met the Chairman of Bro Taf health authority to discuss GP Fundholding. However, my officials have regular meetings with their Health authority counterparts about fundholding matters including the allocation process and risk management.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Bro Taf health authority concerning the impact of disputes between GP fundholders and health authorities over funding levels on patient waiting lists relative to patients charter targets for elective surgery. [2222]

Mr. Davies: The Chairman of Bro Taf health authority has not drawn any such disputes to my attention. Therefore neither I nor my officials have had any consultations with the authority on this subject. GP fundholders are subject to the same Patient's Charter constraints as health authorities and I expect health authorities to monitor their performance in this area.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Overseas Aid

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the amounts of money Britain has given in overseas aid (a) in real terms and (b) as a percentage of gross domestic product in each of the last five years; and if she will make a statement. [1882]

Clare Short: International comparisons of figures for official development assistance (Oda) are normally presented in relation to gross national product on a calendar year basis. UK assistance between 1991 and 1995 (the latest year for which figures are available) was as follows:

	Real terms (million at 1995 prices)	Oda/GNP (percentage)
1991	2,044	0.32
1992	1,988	0.31
1993	2,029	0.31
1994	2,138	0.31
1995	2,000	0.28

The Government are firmly committed to working for a safer, more decent and environmentally stable world, and the eradication of poverty. As announced in the Queen's Speech, our development strategy will be set out in a White Paper to be published in the Autumn.

Indian Subcontinent

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement about current aid support to the Indian sub-continent. [327]

Clare Short [pursuant to her reply, 21 May 1997, c. 91]: The reply should have read Britain spent £298 million on bilateral aid to India, Bangladesh, Pakistan, Nepal and Sri Lanka in 1995–96. South Asia receives the second largest allocation of British bilateral aid of any region in the world, after sub-Saharan Africa. The overall objective of our assistance programme is to help reduce poverty and promote sustainable development.

Montserrat

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what aid the Government are providing to the people of Montserrat in respect of damage caused by the recent volcano; and if she will make a statement. [1746]

Clare Short: Since July 1995, when volcanic activity in Montserrat began, we have committed £10.5 million of Emergency Aid to address the island's immediate needs, and over £12 million of Budgetary Aid to maintain essential government services. We have also spent £12.5 million in Development Aid.

In August 1996, a £25 million aid package was announced for the continued provision of public services and for infrastructural development of the north of the island where most of the population has had to relocate.

Political and Special Advisers

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the name, (b) the salary, (c) the previous occupation and salary and (d) the terms and conditions of each political and special adviser in his Department; and what was the selection process used to appoint these persons. [2424]

Mr. George Robertson: I have appointed Mr. Alasdair McGowan, who was my research assistant, as a Special Adviser.

The terms and conditions of each appointment are set out in the draft model contract, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Special Advisers are paid within a range of £24,349 to £73,484. Their salaries are negotiated individually and are confidential within this range. Details of this and of previous salary are not provided to protect the privacy of the individuals concerned.

This is a personal appointment which I made following consultation with the Permanent Head of the Department and the Prime Minister.

Harrier Carrier Purchase (India)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what negotiations (a) have been held and (b) are proposed with the Indian Government about the purchase of a Harrier carrier; and what related sales would ensue from such a sale. [1886]

Mr. Spellar: No negotiations have taken place between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of India about the purchase of a Harrier carrier, and none is planned. Currently, no Royal Navy ships of this type are available for disposal, nor will any be in the foreseeable future.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Orders in Council

Mr. Fallon: To ask the President of the Council if she will ensure that the Library receives a copy of each Order in Council. [1923]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: I see no case for additional dissemination of Orders in Council. Over 600 Orders in Council, including those recording the admission of new Privy Counsellors and Ministerial appointments, are made each year. Statutory Instruments are published, in many cases following Parliamentary consideration and are thereafter available in the Library. A number of Orders, which include all those relating to the Civil Service, together with Royal Proclamations, are published in the London Gazette of which the Library holds copies. Proposed revisions to the Statutes of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge and their colleges are laid before the House of Commons before approval by Her Majesty. Other categories of Order, including those confirming some 200 Schemes made each year by the Church Commissioners, those approving Channel Islands legislation, those approving the reports of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and those approving the grant of Royal Charters and allowing amendments to the Charters of Chartered bodies, are already in the public domain and copies can always be made available on request.

Political and Special Advisers

Mr. Forth: To ask the President of the Council if she will list (a) the name, (b) the salary, (c) the previous occupation and salary and (d) the terms and conditions of each political and special adviser in her Department; and what was the selection process used to appoint these persons. [2416]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: As indicated in my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's Answer of 2 June to the hon. Member for Chichester, three Special Advisers are being appointed in the Privy Council Office, subject to agreement on their salaries. Mr. Ian McKenzie, who was previously my Research Assistant, will act as my Special Adviser. Mr. Damian Welfare, who is currently Head of Government relations and pubic affairs with the Local Government Association and Miss Marianne Morris, who is an administrator in the Labour Party, have been offered appointment as Special Advisers to my Noble Friend, the Lord Privy Seal, in his capacity as Leader of the House of Lords. All are personal appointments by the Minister concerned following consultations with the Permanent Head of the Department and the Prime Minister.

Special Advisers are paid within a range of £24,349 and £73,484. Their salaries are negotiated individually and are confidential within the range. Details of previous salaries are similarly confidential between departments and the individuals concerned.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Yellow Fever

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to meet WHO representatives to discuss the possible spread of yellow fever to Asia; and if she will make a statement. [2099]

Clare Short: DFID representatives will be meeting with WHO to discuss yellow fever issues in June. We are a significant contributor to the work of WHO to improve disease surveillance and to ensure effective control during outbreaks. Through our support we aim to improve national infrastructures and the capacity for detection. We are also funding the revision of the International Health Regulations, which cover yellow fever.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the risk of yellow fever spreading to Asia; and if she will make a statement. [2098]

Clare Short: Professional advice is that the risk of importation of yellow fever through an infected individual is real and could result in a focused outbreak. However, such an occurrence is unlikely to lead to the disease becoming endemic. The risk is reduced by the application of international travel regulations regarding yellow fever and the increasing use of vaccine in countries where yellow fever is endemic.

Drug Donation Guidelines

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to meet WHO representatives to discuss worldwide implementation of the UN Guidelines for Drug Donation; and if she will make a statement. [2100]

Clare Short: We support the implementation of the UN guidelines for drug donations formulated by WHO's Drugs Action Programme (DAP). In addition to financial support, DFID holds the chair of the DAP Management Advisory committee which regularly reviews progress on implementation of the guidelines.

Political and Special Advisers

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list (a) the names, (b) the salary, (c) the previous occupation and salary and (d) the terms and conditions of each political and special adviser in her Department; and what was the selection process used to appoint these persons. [2411]

Clare Short: DFID has two special advisers, Daniel Harris and Jessica Crow. Both DFID special advisers were previously my personal advisers.

The terms and conditions of each appointment are set out in the draft model contract, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Special advisers are paid within a range of £24,349 to £73,484. Their salaries are negotiated individually and are confidential within this range. Details of this and of previous salary are not provided in order to protect the privacy of the individuals concerned.

These are personal appointments by me following consultation with the Permanent Head of the Department and the Prime Minister.

Myanmar

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) if she will make a statement on the current provision of aid to Myanmar; [2134]

(2) if she will make a statement on her policy in respect of Myanmar. [2133]

Clare Short: In common with its European Partners, Britain suspended non-humanitarian aid to Burma in 1988. There are no present plans to change this position.

In 1995–96 (the latest year for which figures are available), British bilateral aid came to £324,000 of which £294,000 was for the support of refugees on the Thai-Burma border and for disaster relief. The remainder includes colonial pension payments (which are charged to the Aid Programme) and expenditure under Head of Mission discretionary schemes.

Britain's estimated share of net multilateral aid to Burma, all of which was for humanitarian purposes, came to £900,000 in 1995 (the latest available figure).

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many political and personal appointments he has made; and at what cost to public funds. [1582]

Mr. Blunkett [holding answer 5 June 1997]: With the Prime Minister's approval I have appointed the following special advisers: Conor Ryan, and Sophie Linden (part-time).

Mr. Byers: The consultation period on further changes designed to enhance the flexibility of teachers' pension arrangements and on proposals for a longer term review of the scheme ends on 9 June. My right hon. Friend will make an announcement about these matters in due course.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

ENVIRONMENT AND THE REGIONS

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what further proposals he has relating to the transfer of powers from the London Docklands development corporation to the London boroughs of Tower Hamlets, Southwark and Newham. [2164]

Ms Angela Eagle: The only statutory powers which the London Docklands Development Corporation (LDDC) have and which it is necessary to return to the local authorities are those concerned with LDDC's responsibilities as planning authority. Local authorities already have a range of powers enabling them to pursue the kind of general regeneration remit which LDDC has undertaken.

Since 1994 the LDDC have been pursuing a phased programme of withdrawal from the Docklands Urban Development Area (UDA) leading to complete withdrawal and dissolution of the organisation in March 1998. Those phases of the withdrawal programme successfully completed to date are:—

Bermondsay Riverside (LB Southwark)—Area removed from the UDA and planning powers returned to Southwark council on 31 October 1994.

Beckton (LB Newham)—Area removed from the UDA and planning powers returned to Newham Council on 31 December 1995

Surrey Docks (LB Southwark)—Area removed from the UDA and planning powers returned to Southwark Council on 20 December 1996.

Wapping and Limehouse (LB Tower Hamlets)—Area removed from the UDA and planning powers returned to Tower Hamlets council on 31 January 1997.

Apart from transitional powers, enabling completion of certain projects and activities underway at the time of the removal of these areas from the UDA, the LDDC ceased to have any powers to operate in the dedesignated areas after the dates set out.

It is intended that the Isle of Dogs, Leamouth and South Poplar (LB Tower Hamlets) will be removed from the UDA and planning powers returned to LB Tower Hamlets byu the end of this year. LDDC's remaining planning powers thereafter (covering only the Royal Docks area) will return to Newham council when LDDC is dissolved in March 1998.

Planning Permission

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce time limits upon the validity of planning permission. [2296]

Mr. Raynsford: Paragraphs 53 to 60 of DoE Circular 11/95 (Welsh Office Circular 35/95) give comprehensive guidance on this issue. I have no plans to change legislation in this area.

Political and Special Advisers

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list (a) the name, (b) the salary, (c) the previous occupation and salary and (d) the terms and conditions of each political and special adviser in the Department; and what was the selection process used to appoint these persons. [2426]

Mr. Prescott: Joe Irvin, my Special Adviser, was previously my chief of staff when Deputy Leader of the Labour party; Kate Davies, special adviser to the Minister for Transport, was previously his researcher; and David Taylor, my unpaid special adviser, is on temporary leave of absence from his position as Chief Executive of Lancashire Enterprises plc.

The terms and conditions of each appointment are set out in the draft model contract, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Special Advisers are paid within a range of £24,349 to £73,484. Their salaries are negotiated individually and are confidential within this range. Details of this and of previous salary are not provided in order to protect the privacy of the individual concerned.

These are my personal appointments following consultation with the Permanent Secretaries of my Departments, and are approved by the Prime Minister.

Council Tax

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to instigate a comprehensive revaluation of household dwellings for council tax banding purposes; and if he will make a statement. [2403]

Mr. Raynsford: The question of when there should be a revaluation of domestic properties for council tax purposes is one that I shall wish to discuss with the local Government Association and others, before reaching a view.

Drinking Water

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will commission a study on levels of pyrethroids entering drinking water; and if he will make a statement. [2239]

Angela Eagle: Water companies are required to monitor drinking water supplies for those pesticides whose properties and usage make it likely that they will be present. Pyrethroids are unlikely to be present in water supplies. Nevertheless, some water companies have monitored their supplies for key pyrethroids. Since 1991 over 20,000 tests have been carried out for pyrethroids and on no occasion has a pyrethroid been found above the drinking water standard for individual pesticides of 0.1 microgram per litre.

TRANSPORT

Fuel Duty (Buses)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to restore fuel duty rebate to public buses. [2404]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I shall be considering all aspects of support for the bus industry with Treasury colleagues as part of my examination of the best way to introduce an integrated transport policy.

Salisbury Bypass

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what decision he has reached concerning the proposed Salisbury bypass. [2238]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No decision has yet been made on the Salisbury bypass. We are currently taking forward a strategic review of the road programme and an announcement of the terms of that review will be made in due course.

Women Travellers

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he is proposing to enhance the personal safety of women travellers on the railways; and if he will make a statement. [2705]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department of Transport is working with train operators to develop good practice on implementing personal security measures both at stations and on-board vehicles. We are currently developing a secure stations scheme which will establish national best practice on security standards and accredit those stations that have implemented a package of security measures. We will also shortly be publishing the results of our research into people's perceptions of their personal security and measures that would make people feel more confident when using public transport.

Motor Vehicle Licences

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations his Department has received on the subject of the issuing of motor vehicles licences; if he will increase the number of post offices able to issue licences; and if he will make a statement. [2280]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Some 521 representations have been made over the past three years. The current network of 4,000 vehicle licence issuing post offices is unlikely to be extended unless it can be shown to be cost effective and does not add to the cost of collecting vehicle excise duty.

Bus Services

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue guidelines for the improvement of bus services on Sundays. [2457]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I am examining how buses should play their part in an integrated transport policy. The best way of encouraging an adequate provision of bus services throughout the week will be part of this work.

Sustainable Transport Packages

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to give local authorities further powers and funding to develop sustainable transport packages. [2179]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have no evidence that local authorities need additional powers to implement transport packages. The Government will continue to fund viable transport packages as far as resources permit.

Sound-reducing Barriers (A20)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what were the criteria used to determine that sound-reducing barriers should be erected alongside the A20, Swanley bypass in Kent. [1655]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 2 June 1997]: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mrs. Theresa May, dated 6 June 1997:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your recent question about the criteria used to determine that sound-reducing barriers should be erected alongside the A20 Swanley Bypass.

Those barriers were erected under discretionary powers in the Highways Act, in accordance with a policy announced in March 1979 to provide noise barriers alongside trunk roads, subject to the availability of funds and if appropriate, where properties exposed to high noise levels had not benefited from the Noise Insulation Regulations 1975. The barriers at Swanley were provided because they offered an effective shield to a sufficient number of properties exposed to traffic noise at or above the level at which they would have qualified for insulation under the Noise Insulation Regulations and the cost did not exceed the notional cost of providing insulation.

I hope this is helpful.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Political and Special Advisers

Mr. Forth: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list (a) the name, (b) the salary, (c) the previous occupation and salary and (d) the terms and conditions of each political and special adviser in his Department; and what was the selection process used to appoint these persons. [2410]

Dr. David Clark: There is only one special adviser in my office, Andrew Lappin, his previous occupation was parliamentary researcher.

The terms and conditions of his appointment are set out in the draft model contract, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Special advisers are paid within a range of £24,349 to £73,484. Their salaries are negotiated individually and are confidential within this range. Details of this and previous salaries are not provided in order to protect the privacy of individuals concerned.

This was a personal appointment by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster following consultation with the Permanent Head of the Department and the Prime Minister.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list (a) the name, (b) the salary, (c) the previous occupation and salary and (d) the terms and conditions of each political and special adviser in his Department; and what was the selection process used to appoint these persons. [2418]

Mr. Hoon: There are currently no political or special advisers in this Department.

WALES

Mixed Sex Wards

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library the statistics held by his Department on the extent of (a) mixed sex wards, (b) mixed sex bays and (c) mixed sex bathing and toilet facilities in hospitals. [781]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The information requested is not held centrally.

Disability

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to adopt a social model of disability in framing all future and amending previous relevant legislation and guidance; and if he will make a statement. [1662]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 4 June by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, Official Report, column 190.

Political and Special Advisers

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the name, (b) the salary, (c) the previous occupation and salary and (d) the terms and conditions of each political and special adviser in his Department; and what was the selection process used to appoint these persons. [2412]

Mr. Ron Davies: My special advisers are John Adams and Huw Roberts. Their previous occupations were policy adviser and political consultant respectively.

The terms and conditions of each appointment are set out in the draft model contract, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Special advisers are paid within a range of £24,349 to £73,484. Their salaries are negotiated individually and are confidential within this range. Details of this and of previous salary are not provided in order to protect the privacy of the individuals concerned.

These are personal appointments by the Secretary of State following consultation with the Permanent Head of the Department and the Prime Minister.

Cardiff Royal Infirmary

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Llandough NHS Trust, the UHW NHS Trust and the Bro Taf health authority concerning the implementation of the conditions imposed by his predecessor concerning the closure of the Cardiff Royal Infirmary (a) generally and (b) specifically in relation to elective orthopaedic surgery. [2406]

Mr. Ron Davies: None, though my officials keep in close touch with the health authority and local trusts, who are actively working together on the action plan for the transfer of services from CRI to UHW. The business case for the transfer of services from CRI to UHW has been approved and Llandough NHS Trust is preparing a business case for the transfer of elective orthopaedics.

St. David's Hospital Site

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Bro Taf health authority and the Cardiff Community Healthcare Trust concerning a start date for the replacement neighbourhood hospital on the St. David's Hospital site. [2409]

Mr. Ron Davies: None, but my officials have been in contact with the trust, who will be submitting an outline business case to the Welsh Office in the near future.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mr. Asil Nadir

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Attorney-General what representations his Department is making to the Turkish authorities over the case of Mr. Nadir. [2210]

The Attorney-General: The Turkish authorities were notified, through Interpol, of the existence of a warrant for the arrest of Asil Nadir. They were asked to arrest him on his arrival in Turkey with a view to extradition. They have declined to do this because the Turkish constitution forbids extradition of Turkish citizens to other countries.

Hearing Loss (War Pensioners)

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has for a full medical and scientific review of the qualification for war pensions in respect of noise-induced hearing loss; when the review will begin; and how long the review is expected to take. [1632]

Mr. Denham: On 23 May the Minister with special responsibility for war pensions, my noble Friend the Baroness Hollis of Heigham, wrote to Mr. Graham Downing, national president of the Royal British Legion. She informed him that she would be arranging a meeting of experts in the field of hearing loss to review the scientific basis of the approach to the assessment of noise induced sensorineural hearing loss in war pensions. My noble friend will invite Professors Lutman and Davis to take part along with other independent experts who have not been involved in the matter so far.

The timing of the meeting will depend on the availability of the participants. My noble Friend will shortly be writing to the experts to invite their participation and to establish when they are free to meet.

We are aware of the controversy surrounding this issue and are determined to be satisfied that the medical evidence is clear and unambiguous and that decisions are made in accordance with war pensions legislation. I would hope that the review will be able to come to a speedy conclusion.

Bronchitis and Emphysema

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants in each coalfield area had made an application for chronic bronchitis and emphysema awards; and how many awards were made between 13 September 1993 and 9 April 1997. [1701]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the tables.

Political and Special Advisers

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list (a) the names, (b) the salary (c) the previous occupation and salary and (d) the terms and conditions of each political and special adviser in her Department; and what was the selection process used to appoint these persons. [2414]

Ms Harman: I have appointed John McTernan and Liz Kendall as special advisers. Both were formerly employed as advisers to me in opposition. The terms and conditions of their appointments are set out in the draft model contract, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. Special advisers are paid within a range of £23,349 to £73,484. Their salaries are negotiated individually within this range. Details of present and previous salaries are not provided, in order to protect the privacy of the individuals concerned.

These are personal appointments made by me following consultation with the permanent secretary and the Prime Minister.

Wages (Vouchers)

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action she intends to take to stop the practice of employers paying part of employees' wages in vouchers. [2260]

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of the economic impact on households of employers issuing shopping vouchers in lieu of wages. [2297]

Mr. Denham: The Government are aware of employers' use of vouchers as (part) payment of wages. In 1994–95, about £40 million was paid through such practices to approximately 160,000 employees whose earnings, including benefits in kind, were £8,500 per annum or more, and to directors. The available information does not distinguish between shopping vouchers and other forms of voucher.

We are committed to the principle of National Insurance (NI) and take very seriously any form of abuse which undermines the integrity of the scheme. We shall look carefully at any pay practices adopted by employers to avoid payment of NI contributions and will take appropriate action against abuse. We will keep the position, including the economic impact on employees' households, under review.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Primary Purpose Rule

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the timetable for conducting the review of the primary purpose rule; and what advice immigration officials are being given in the meantime on assessing such cases. [2401]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 5 June, Official Report, column 218.

General Elections (Deposits)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce proposals to increase the deposit in general elections. [2471]

Mr. George Howarth: At this stage, we have no plans to increase the deposit for candidates at a parliamentary election.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of the present sum the original £150 deposit for general elections introduced in 1918 would be if it had been increased in line with prices since that date; and what would be the equivalent percentage if the £500 deposit had been increased in line with prices since it was introduced. [2463]

Mr. Howarth: We estimate that the £150 deposit introduced in 1918 would now be equivalent to £4,093, if it had been increased in line with the inflation, which represents an 818.6 per cent. increase on the present deposit. The £500 deposit introduced in 1985 would be equivalent today to £825, an increase of 165 per cent. and £4,093 would represent an increase of 496 per cent. on that revalued deposit.

Entry Clearance Refusals (Appeals)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reintroduce the right of appeal to those refused entry clearances to visit the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [2262]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 19 May, Official Report, column 7.

Political and Special Advisers

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) the name, (b) the salary, (c) the previous occupation and salary and (d) the terms and conditions of each political and special adviser in his Department; and what was the selection process used to appoint these persons. [2419]

Mr. Straw: My Department employs one political adviser, Ed Owen, previously employed as a journalist, and one special adviser, Norman Warner, who was previously employed as a consultant on social policy and public sector management. The terms and conditions of each appointment are set out in the draft model contract, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Special advisers are paid within a range of £24,349 to £73,484. Their salaries are negotiated individually and are confidential within this range. Details of this and previous salary are not provided in order to protect the privacy of the individuals concerned. These are personal appointments made by me, following consultation with the Prime Minister and with the permanent head of the Department.

Asylum Seekers

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what instructions he has given to the immigration authorities regarding the treatment of Albanian nationals already in the United Kingdom who have applied for asylum. [1526]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Since March, consideration of asylum applications by Albanian nationals and enforcement action in refused cases have been suspended. We are now satisfied that, while the situation remains tense and volatile in some parts of the country, the situation in other parts, including the capital Tirana, is sufficiently calm to make it safe to resume returns in appropriate cases. Consideration of outstanding asylum applications is also being resumed.

Criminal Cases Review Commission

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the cases transferred to the Criminal Cases Review Commission by his Department, indicating the date when these cases were first referred to his Department; [1032]

(2) if he will list the cases transferred to the Criminal Cases Review Commission in order of priority; to what extent the order of priority reflects the date when the case was first submitted; and what is the anticipated date for a decision on these cases. [1033]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 3 June 1997]: A total of 261 individual cases were initially transferred to the Commission from the Home Office. It is not normal practice to make publicly available the names of petitioners. By virtue of paragraph 6 of schedule 1 to the Criminal Appeal Act 1995 it is a matter for the Commission to decide on its procedures, but I understand that 165 of the cases initially transferred to the Commission are already being worked on, and that work on the remaining cases will have begun by about the end of June.

"Civil Protection"

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the cost per edition of his Department's publication, "Civil Protection"; and what is the total cost of the editions produced to date, in 1997 prices; [1943]

(2) how many copies of each edition of his Department's publication, "Civil Protection", are produced; and of these how many are distributed in response to requests and how many are sent unsolicited. [1945]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 5 June 1997]: The latest edition, which was issued in May, cost £17,000 including distribution costs. The marginal cost of Home Office staff time spent on editorial functions is absorbed under other budgets. The total cost of the editions produced between 1991 and 1997 is £558,260 in 1997 prices. Figures for earlier years are not available. Around 40,000 copies of each edition are produced. To date, 34,700 copies of the latest edition have been issued in response to requests, including regular subscribers. No copies are sent unsolicited.

CABINET OFFICE

Political and Special Advisers

Mr. Forth: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will list (a) the income, (b) the salary, (c) the previous occupation and salary and (d) the terms and conditions of each political and special adviser in his office; and what was the selection process used to appoint these persons. [2407]

Mr. Mandelson: The Minister without Portfolio does not have a political or special adviser paid out of public funds.

AGRICULTURE FISHERIES AND FOOD

Quarantine

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will review the case for inoculation as a substitute for the quarantine of animals. [2363]

Mr. Rooker: Yes.

Political and Special Advisers

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list (a) the name, (b) the salary, (c) the previous occupation and salary and (d) the terms and conditions of each political and special adviser in his Department; and what was the selection process used to appoint these persons. [2422]

Mr. Morley: There are currently two political and special advisers to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. They are Ms Cathy McGlynn and Mr. T. Walker.

Both were previously policy advisers to the right hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham).

The terms and conditions of each appointment are set out in the draft model contract, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Special advisers are paid within a range of £24,349 to £73,484. Their salaries are negotiated individually and are confidential within this range. Details of this and of previous salary are not provided in order to protect the privacy of the individuals concerned.

These are personal appointments by the Minister following consultation with the permanent head of the Department and the Prime Minister.

Beef Imports

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if SEAC terms of reference include the power to recommend a ban on beef imports into the United Kingdom. [2202]

Mr. Rooker: SEAC's terms of reference permit it to advise the Government on all matters concerned with spongiform encephalopathies. As such it is able to make whatever recommendations it regards as appropriate to safeguard public or animal health.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, in the absence of any variation in the beef ban, he will consider banning all imports of beef into the United Kingdom. [2203]

Mr. Rooker: No. I would however refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. Friend, the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 5 June, Official Report, columns 227–28.

BSE

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what checking mechanisms have been put in place by departmental officials to ensure that there is no BSE-contaminated feed either in store or trade circulation; [2204]

(2) what estimate he has made of the amount of BSE contaminated feed (a) in store and (b) in circulation in the United Kingdom. [2205]

Mr. Rooker: The State Veterinary Service (SVS) introduced a feed sampling programme in February 1996. Samples of feed and feed ingredients are taken from feed mills, farms using on-farm feed mixers and any site where feed, or ingredients for feed, are produced or stored. Feed samples are tested for the presence of ruminant and porcine protein using the compound feed ELISA test. Results of this surveillance activity are published in the monthly BSE Enforcement Bulletin and copies are available in the Library of the House.

In June last year, the feed recall scheme was launched to ensure that residual stocks of mammalian meat and bonemeal (MBM) were removed from farms, feed mills and feed merchants before the ban on possession came into effect last August. In all, over 11,000 tonnes of material was collected in the UK. This material is now in secure storage awaiting destruction. This material is not known to be contaminated with BSE—the controls on Specified Bovine Materials, requiring all tissues known to harbour BSE infectivity to be destroyed, were in place before the feed recall scheme was undertaken, considerably reduce the possibility of infectivity being present in the recalled feed.

Completed investigations into the results of the feed sampling programme which were positive and inconclusive (accounting for less than 2 per cent. of over 9,000 samples of the feed currently in circulation) have so far revealed no mammalian protein in ruminant rations or mammalian MBM in feed for farmed livestock.

Sheep Dips

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the effect of pyrethroid sheep dips on aquatic life in rivers and streams. [2240]

Mr. Rooker: No veterinary medicine is authorised for use unless it meets stringent statutory criteria of safety, quality and efficacy. Safety includes risk to the environment. The independent Scientific Veterinary Products Committee is currently undertaking a review of non-organophosphorus (OP) sheep dips to consider whether existing controls on OP dips should be extended to these products. The labels of authorised synthetic pyrethroid dips already carry clear warnings about the dangers to fish and other aquatic life. The labels also warn that it is an offence to pollute any stream or watercourse and advise farmer to contact the Environment Agency or the Scottish Environmental Protection Agency as appropriate, where there may be any doubt.

Poultry (USA)

Mr. Ivan Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will press the United States Department of Agriculture to end immediately its ban on the export of poultry to Europe. [2261]

Mr. Rooker: There is no ban by the United States Department of Agriculture on the export of poultry or poultry meat to Europe. Exports of poultry meat to the European Community must, however, be accompanied by an export health certificate authorised by an official veterinarian to the effect that the consignment meets Community import health requirements. US veterinarians will not authorise export health certificates for poultry meat and exports cannot therefore take place. Discussions between the European Commission, who have competence in this area, and the US authorities are continuing.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Political and Special Advisers

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will publish the names of the political and special advisers appointed to her Department since the general election. [1627]

Mrs. Beckett: I have appointed Dan Corry and Sheila Watson to my Department as special advisers who will be paid from public funds.

In addition I have appointed Lord Hollick as an unpaid special adviser.

Alternative Energy Sources

Mr. Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what plans the Government have to review the current policy towards alternative energy sources; [1351]

(2) what plans the Government have to support efforts to refine existing forms of alternative energy to produce more electricity from the same resources; [1350]

(3) what plans the Government have to encourage off-shore windfarms. [1352]

Mr. Battle: The Government propose to undertake a new and strong drive to develop renewable energy sources in line with our manifesto commitment. To this end I anticipate reviewing policy including considerations of what would be necessary and practicable to achieve 10 per cent. of UK's electricity needs from renewables by the year 2010 and how renewables can make an effective contribution to meeting requirements for future greenhouse gas reduction commitments. I will make a further announcement in due course. In the meantime the Government's new and renewable energy programme, currently underway will continue. I have already announced that I will initiate shortly a consultation exercise with the relevant trade bodies of the renewable energy industry, OFFER and the regional electricity companies on a fifth non-fossil fuel obligation (NFFO) order for renewable energy in England and Wales, leading to an announcement later in the year.

Windfarms

Mr. Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what is the capacity in MW of the current number of windfarms; [1353]

(2) how many windfarms are currently installed; and how many acres they cover in total. [1347]

Mr. Battle: At 31 March 1997, there were 42 windfarms in the United Kingdom with a total installed capacity of 283 Megawatts. Precise information about the area they cover is not available. However, estimates suggest that the area occupied by individual wind turbine towers can range between five and 20 square metres. For a wind farm consisting of twenty 500kW turbines, each covering an area of approximately 10 square metres, the total footprint would be about 200 square metres. Access tracks where required would occupy further land. The turbines might be placed within an area of about 1–2km^2 but the bulk of the site would be unaffected and could continue in its original use.

Aerospace Industry

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many people have been employed in the aerospace industry in each year since 1992. [1638]

Mr. Battle: The number of people employed in the UK aerospace industry in each year from 1992 to 1995 are as follows:

Year	Number
1992	149,000
1993	126,000
1994	114,000
1995	108,000

Research

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the Government's policy in respect of scientific and medical research. [1482]

Mr. Battle: The Government are committed to a strong science and engineering base and to the maintenance of its international position of excellence, as an essential underpinning resource both to our national economic future and to the quality of life. Research and development and the exploitation of its results will provide the answer to many of the problems faced by society: in health; in social issues; and in the environment. Medical research has a key role in that. Government have a crucial role to play as prime funder of curiosity-driven science, with its proven record of stimulating new innovations and enhancing our quality of life: and as facilitator and co-ordinator to ensure that the efforts of those engaged in scientific research are properly encouraged and developed in the nation's best interests Business has a responsibility for driving the research and development of new and improved products and services. We shall be seeking to:

use science and technology to improve our quality of life;

encourage new ideas and innovation to the market;

strengthen the voice of science in Government; and end the bias against science in our culture.

We are committed to re-invigorating the science and engineering base and will be developing policy in the light of the report of the Dearing inquiry into higher education. I shall also be working with business and with colleagues across Government to sustain the health of science, engineering and technology in the UK, to maximise its contribution to economic competitiveness and the quality of life and to improve the way that science is used across Government to inform policy.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals she has to promote further co-operation with the European Union in the field of scientific and medical research. [1484]

Mr. Battle: The Government attach great importance to co-operation with other members of the European Union in the field of scientific research. UK participants play an active role in the EU's Fourth Framework Programme (FP4) for Research and Technological Development which covers a wide range of scientific, technological and medical research. Negotiations concerning the content and organisation of the EU's Fifth Framework Programme, due to start in 1999, have recently begun. The UK has already played, and will continue to play, an active role in the shaping of this future programme, to ensure that UK researchers and technologists have every opportunity to build upon their current, successful levels of participation.

Medical research is well provided for in the Commission proposals for FP5, particularly in the programme "Unlocking the Resources of the Living World", which is specifically aimed at improving the quality of life and for example, includes research: on the control of viral and other infectious diseases; the development of new antibiotics and anti-cancer agents; and the health effects of pollution.

Magnox Nuclear Liabilities

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the cost of (a) current Magnox nuclear liabilities and (b) future Magnox nuclear liabilities; and if she will set out the basis on which these estimates are made. [2228]

Mr. Battle: The estimated cost of meeting Magnox Electric's liabilities are given in the company's report and accounts for the year ended 31 March 1996 as £8.9 billion discounted at 3 per cent. real and £18.2 billion undiscounted. I understand that updated figures will be published in the company's report and accounts for the year ended 31 March 1997, which should be published in the next few months.

Hydrocarbon Reserves

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will commission an assessment of the environmental impact of continuing to explore and develop new hydrocarbon reserves; and if she will make a statement. [2126]

Mr. Battle: The Joint Nature Conservation Committee provides an assessment of the potential impact of hydrocarbons exploration and development on the environmental resources of areas before they are offered for licensing. On the basis of its advice, some areas may not be offered while others may have conditions applied to any licence to ensure that possible adverse impacts are minimised. These conditions may also require the provision of an environmental assessment by the licensee when preliminary work has identified the preferred location of a well or development and the probable characteristics of the project.

Nuclear Waste

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the number of escorts of nuclear waste by the UK Atomic Energy Authority Constabulary in 1996; if she will provide a breakdown of the cost of these escorts; and if she will make a statement. [2227]

Mr. Battle: Nuclear waste is not a category of nuclear material which requires to be escorted under the international recommendations, therefore no escorts were provided (or costs incurred) by the UK Atomic Energy Authority Constabulary in 1996 in this respect.

Nuclear Safety

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans the Government have to meet its new international obligations under the international nuclear safety convention; and if she will make a statement. [2231]

Mr. Battle: The Convention on Nuclear Safety was ratified by the United Kingdom on 17 January 1996 and entered into force on 24 October 1996. As a contracting party under the Convention, the United Kingdom will be required to produce a national report on how nuclear safety obligations are met in this country. These obligations include establishing a legislative and regulatory framework and ensuring that sufficient numbers of qualified staff are available throughout each nuclear installation's life. Steps must also be taken to ensure that design, construction and operation of civil nuclear power plant are safe, that safety assessments are carried out throughout the life of a nuclear installation and that emergency plans are routinely tested. In view of the stringent safety regime that the Government requires of the industry, we anticipate that the United Kingdom will have no difficulty in meeting these obligations.

National reports will be reviewed and discussed in detail by contracting parties at periodic review meetings, to be held at intervals of not more than three years. The first review meeting will be held at the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna in April 1999.

Coal

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list her Department's current programmes for research into clean coal technology; and if she will make a statement. [1008]

Mr. Battle: My Department's research on clean coal technology is being undertaken in seven programme areas:

Coal Exploration and Extraction

Coal Preparation

Coal Handling and Supply

Coal Combustion in Conventional Utility Power Generation

Advanced Power Generation

Other Coal Conversion and Utilisation Processes

Technology Transfer and Commercialisation

Projects covering the seven programme areas are undertaken in collaboration with industry, universities and a number of overseas organisations. The results are disseminated via published project summaries and technical reports, including seminars, workshops and conferences. An annual report and newsletter is also published on developments in all the programme areas. The present phase of the programme is due to be completed in 1998.

A mid-term evaluation of the programme by an international panel of experts was undertaken in 1996 and a report of the evaluation published in July 1996. Industry provided evidence to the international panel which indicated that the programme benefits are a mixture of gross and net effects ranging from firm export orders and potential future sales of components, innovative mechanisms to reduce NO_x emissions, techniques to use more UK coals in steel making, etc., they do show the programme has been of significant value to UK industry. We are examining what other options there may be to support clean coal technology.

British Coal

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what functions are still administered by British Coal; what functions previously performed by British Coal are now performed by (i) her Department and (ii) the Coal Authority; and when she expects British Coal to be finally wound up. [1695]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 2 June 1997]: British Coal remains responsible for the disposal of its remaining assets (principally property) and for the management of such liabilities as still remain with the Corporation (principally various personal injury claims).

British Coal's liability for the provision of concessionary fuel to ex-employees of British Coal and liability to make certain contributions to the former British Coal, pension schemes, was transferred to the Department in March 1995. The Department has also taken on responsibility for health and injury liabilities of former British Coal employees who transferred to private sector companies and the Coal Authority in respect of their past service with the Corporation.

The Coal Authority was established in September 1994 and has four main functions:

- licensing coal-mining operations and granting rights to exploit coal;
- handling coal-mining subsidence damage claims which are not the responsibility of licensees;
- managing property interests and historic liabilities; and
- holding and giving access to information on past, present and future coal mining and coal reserves.

It is anticipated that the DTI will take over the remaining management functions of the Corporation by the end of 1997. No decision has been taken on the date thereafter when the Corporation will be dissolved.

Plutonium Waste

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions she has had with British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. about the transfer by air of plutonium waste from Britain to Germany. [2180]

Mr. Battle: None. Arrangements for the transport of nuclear material from British Nuclear Fuels-owned sites is an operational matter for the company and its customers, subject to meeting regulatory requirements.

TREASURY

Tax Receipts

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will publish on a monthly basis for this financial year the actual receipts achieved for each of the taxes collected by the Inland Revenue. [1856]

(2) what estimate he has made of the receipts in each month of the present financial year from each of the taxes collected by the Inland Revenue. [1857]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 3 June 1997]: Monthly receipts of taxes collected by the Inland revenue are first published in the monthly PSBR release and further detail is supplied in table 2.1c of Financial Statistics. Estimates of receipts are not published on a monthly basis.

Bank of England (Correspondence)

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the dates on which he has written to the Governor of the Bank of England; and if he will place a copy of each letter in the library. [2302]

Mrs. Liddell: The Chancellor wrote to the Governor on 6 May, setting out the new monetary policy arrangements, and on 20 May dealing with the future of banking supervision. Copies of both of these letters have been placed in the Library.

The Chancellor writes to the Governor from time to time on a range of matters, some of which are commercially confidential or market sensitive. It would not be appropriate to place such letters in the Library.

Full Employment

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate, based on the Treasury model of the economy, the level of interest rates and the weighted average exchange rate required to enable the economy to return to full employment at a high and sustainable rate of growth. [2283]

Mrs. Liddell: It has not, since 1978, been the practice to provide results from the Treasury model in response to Parliamentary Questions. The model is available for Members' use through the Library of the House.

Landowners (Tax Exemptions)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will make publicly available the names and addresses of landowners who claim conditional exemption from inheritance tax or capital transfer tax because they allow public access to their land; [1106]

(2) what steps he takes to ensure that landowners conditionally exempt from inheritance tax publicise adequately the agreed public access requirement. [1105]

Dawn Primarolo: In return for conditional exemption for land or buildings, owners must undertake not only to allow reasonable public access to the property but also to maintain and preserve its character. A number of agencies advise the Inland Revenue on matters concerning eligibility for exemption. The relevant agency also negotiates and agrees with each owner the arrangements covering the maintenance, preservation and public access aspects, including the appropriate level and nature of publicity about access.

Owners' compliance with their agreed undertakings is regularly monitored by the Inland Revenue and the heritage agencies. Any breach of the undertakings may result in the loss of the exemption and the payment of the deferred tax charge.

Information about the names and addresses of owners of land conditionally exempted from inheritance tax or capital transfer tax is, like other information about taxpayers, covered by the confidentiality provisions of section 182 of the Finance Act 1989.

Integrated Services Digital Network

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to propose the inclusion in the draft directive on integrated services digital network a statement that the directive will not apply to communications relating to financial services. [1220]

Mrs. Liddell: It is intended that the directive will apply to financial services. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is aware of the concerns raised by the financial services industry and its regulators. The Government are seeking to balance the interaction between investor protection and industry practice with the need for adequate data protection.

Insider Trading

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps the Government propose to take to stop insider trading; and if he will introduce legislation (a) requiring public companies to provide notification to their shareholders of significant changes in their circumstances to reach them not later than the information is released to the Stock Exchange and (b) prohibiting meetings with representatives of such companies by investment analysts enabling the analysts to acquire information about a company earlier than the company's private shareholders. [2128]

Mrs. Liddell: The Criminal Justice Act 1993 makes it a criminal offence to engage in insider dealing in the UK. The Government will keep the scope and effectiveness of this legislation under review. But we have no plans to introduce the additional legislation suggested. The Stock Exchange Listing Rules already place a duty on listed companies to make price sensitive information available to their shareholders and other members of the public on the same basis.

Manufactures

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Treasury's forecast of the change in the volume of production, imports and exports of manufactures in each of the next five years as a result of the rise in interest rates and the exchange rate since 1994. [2290]

Mrs. Liddell: It is not possible to isolate with confidence the effects of changes in interest rates and the exchange rate from the various other factors affecting changes in manufacturing output, exports and imports. The next Treasury forecast will be published on 2 July 1997.

November Budget

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what remit he has given to the National Audit Office when asking them to report on the economic assumptions underlying last November's Budget. [2165]

Mrs. Liddell: In order to assist the Government in preparing their forecast of the public finances, the National Audit Office has been invited to review the assumptions adopted for economic growth, unemployment and interest rates and the conventions used for projecting proceeds from privatisation and from "spend to save" expenditure measures. A report will be published before the Budget.

Insurance Industry

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the implications of his oral statement of 20 May, Official Report, columns 508–11, as regards departmental responsibilities for the insurance industry. [1123]

Mrs. Liddell: The statement did not cover this matter.

Bank of England

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the total of ways and means advances from the Bank of England to Her Majesty's Government at the end of each financial year since 1990–91. [1448]

Mrs. Liddell: Outstanding ways and means advances from Issue Department at the Bank of England to the National Loans Fund at the end of each financial year since 1990–91 are set out in the table.

Date (end of financial year)	Outstanding ways and means advances from Issue Department (£ millions)
1990–91	6,918
1991–92	7,187
1992–93	3,062
1993–94	6,750
1994–95	15,904
1995–96	15,654
1996–97	14,322

Public Sector Deficit

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what extent he is currently over or under funding the public sector deficit. [1530]

Mrs. Liddell: From 1996–97 the funding rule was replaced by a target to finance the Central Government Borrowing Requirement (CGBR) plus maturing gilts and any net increase in the foreign exchange reserves through debt sales. The latest estimate of the 1996–97 financing requirement is £39.4 billion, of which £25.1 billion is to finance the CGBR, £12.4 billion is to finance gilt redemptions, and the remaining £1.9 billion is to finance the net change in foreign reserves and financing carry-over from 1995–96. Gilts sales in 1996–97 amounted to some £38.8 billion, sales of National Savings products £4.8 billion, and there was negative financing of £0.4 billion from sales of other public debt. Overall there was therefore a £3.9 billion excess of gilt sales relative to the final gilt sales requirement.

Mortgage tax Relief

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will investigate the German system of mortgage tax relief for first-time buyers of homes as an alternative to MIRAS. [2089]

Mrs. Liddell: Whilst I am aware of the general German system of tax relief on home purchase I do not know of any special arrangements for first-time buyers. My officials will therefore seek to obtain details of these.

SCOTLAND

Departmental Publications

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland by what means his Department makes available it publications in (a) Braille, (b) audio tape and (c) large print; and how this is publicised. [1675]

Mr. Dewar: Publications in Braille and audio tape are made available and publicised through the Scottish Braille Press who distribute them to individuals and organisations for the visually impaired throughout Scotland. My Department does not currently produce publications in large print. We are, however, presently considering how we might increase the range of information in alternative formats for people who are visually impaired.

Speeding

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total amount raised through the payment of fixed penalties for speeding in each of the last five financial years, for each police force in Scotland; and if there has been any change of policy by the police forces regarding the collection of speeding fines during the past five years. [1284]

Mr. McLeish: Police fixed penalties for speeding were only introduced in April 1993 and have been set at £40 since then. The following table gives the information held centrally on the number of police conditional offers of fixed penalties for speeding issued in each of the last three financial years, for each police force in Scotland. The fixed penalties are collected by the Clerk of the District Court with jurisdiction over locus of the offence. It is not possible from information held centrally to give the total amounts raised from fixed penalties for speeding in each police force area for the period covered in the table.

Number of police conditional offers issued under section 75(3) of the Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988 in relation to speeding offences, 1993–94 to 1995–96

HEALTH

Dental Services

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures the Government are currently taking to ensure the retention of qualified dentists in the general dental service; and if he will make a statement. [1890]

Mr. Milburn: This area is under review.

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the total amounts claimed for dental treatments from the Dental Practice Board in each of the last five years in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement on the relationship between these figures and the numbers of general dental practitioners in the same periods. [1894]

Mr. Milburn: Information on payments scheduled by the Dental Practice Board for England and Wales is given in the table. Questions relating to Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland respectively. The table includes figures for the number of general dental practitioners on health authority lists.

General dental service: Scheduled gross payments to dentists for item of service and number of dentists—1992–93 to 1996–97

England and Wales

	England		Wales
	Item of service payments £ million[1]	Number of dentists[2]	Item of service payments £ million[1]	Number of dentists[2]
1992–93	966.6	15,618	53.4	831
1993–94	884.3	16,020	48.7	858
1994–95	925.3	15,745	49.8	850
1995–96	931.5	15,998	49.5	855
1996–97	951.3	16,387	51.1	913

[1] Most child treatments were paid for through capitation payments until September 1996. Therefore the item of service figures do not give a true reflection of the amount of child treatment carried out. The figures include entry payments.

[2] These figures are a headcount of the number of different dentists on Health Authority lists. They exclude community salaried and hospital dentists.

Capital Investment

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total amount of money currently spent to assist in capital investment in general medical practices; what were the figures in each of the last five financial years; and what are the figures for capital investment in dental practices. [1892]

Mr. Milburn: It is not possible to identify separately the total amounts paid to general medical practitioners and general dental practitioners to support capital investment.

Sunderland Hospitals (Name Change)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total cost to the Sunderland Hospital Trust of changing the name of Sunderland District General hospital to the Sunderland Royal hospital. [2461]

Mr. Milburn: Sunderland District General hospital was recently renamed Sunderland Royal hospital to reflect its royal designation. The change reflects the hospital's links with Sunderland Royal Infirmary, which closed in 1995 when services were transferred to more modern buildings at the District General Hospital. We understand from City Hospitals Sunderland National Health Service Trust that the costs of the title transfer were at around £1,000 and were paid from non-exchequer funds.

Political and Special Advisers

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) the name, (b) the salary, (c) the previous occupation and salary and (d) the terms and conditions of each political and special adviser in his Department; and what was the selection process used to appoint these persons. [2425]

Mr. Dobson: I have appointed Mr. Joe McCrea as my special adviser. He was previously my research assistant. The terms and conditions of his appointment are set out in the draft model contract, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Special advisers are paid within a range of £24,349 to £73,484. Their salaries are negotiated individually and are confidential within this range. Details of this and of previous salary are not provided in order to protect the privacy of the individuals concerned.

This is a personal appointment made by me following consultation with the permanent head of the Department and the Prime Minister.

Silicone Breast Implants

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the review of the use of silicone breast implants to be completed; and if he will make a statement. [2299]

Mr. Boateng: The Independent Review Group aims to report to the Chief Medical Officer in late 1997. The completion date for the review will, however, depend on the amount of work that the Group considers necessary to fulfil the remit.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Schengen Agreement

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will deposit a copy of the full Schengen agreement text in the Library prior to the signature of the treaty of Amsterdam. [2009]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Schengen Agreement is not a Treaty to which this country is a party, nor is it an EC or EU document. We will consider whether to deposit the Schengen Agreement in the Libraries of the House in the light of developments in the IGC negotiations.

Human Rights

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the compatibility of the current British interpretation of human rights with the draft Amsterdam treaty, with particular reference to the use of the term "fundamental freedoms" in article F of the draft treaty. [1995]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We consider the use of the term human rights and fundamental freedoms in the draft Treaty to be fully compatible with the UK's understanding of that term.

Algeria

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to send a British team to monitor the Algerian elections. [1583]

Mr. Fatchett: The UK contributed two observers to the United Nations co-ordinated team which monitored the Legislative Elections in Algeria which took place on 5 June 1997.

NATO (Sintra Meeting)

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of (a) the meeting in Paris on 27 May between NATO Heads of State and Government and the Russian President and (b) the North Atlantic Council meeting of NATO Foreign Ministers at Sintra on 29 and 30 May. [2847]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: In Paris my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister signed, with his NATO colleagues, the President of Russia, and the NATO Secretary-General, the Founding Act on Mutual Relations, Co-operation and Security between NATO and the Russian Federation. This is an historic document designed to encourage greater trust and co-operation between Russia and NATO.

The main provisions of the Act are:

- a list of shared principles, including the right of States to choose the means to ensure their own security;
- arrangements for a Permanent Joint Council which will meet monthly at the level of Ambassadors, twice yearly at Ministerial level, and on demand in a crisis;
- consultation and co-operation over security crises, crisis management and conflict resolution, joint operations, defence policy and military doctrine and arms control;
- an agreed approach to the adaption of the Treaty on Conventional Forces in Europe and provisions for more co-operation between military establishments.

The NATO Foreign Ministers in Sintra had a preliminary discussion on decisions to be taken at the NATO Summit meeting in Madrid on 8 July. In particular they discussed NATO enlargement but did not reach conclusions on which of the applicants for membership will be invited to join the Alliance at Madrid. That decision will be taken by Allied Governments in time for the Summit.

Foreign Ministers also initialled a draft NATO/Ukraine Charter which will provide a basis for enhanced co-operation symbolising NATO's recognition of the importance of Ukraine's sovereignty and independence.

On 30 May NATO Foreign Ministers and the 27 Partner countries launched the Euro-Atlantic Partnership Council and an expansion of NATO's programme with Partners, Partnership for Peace. The enhanced Partnership for Peace encourages Partners to plan, train for and mount the full range of peacekeeping operations including the most demanding. The Euro-Atlantic Partnership Council will also provide a political forum for discussing Partnership activities, and wider issues of European security.

Copies of the NATO Russian Founding Act have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the forthcoming business in the Council of the European Union for June; and if he will list major EU events for the next six months. [2848]

Mr. Fatchett: In 1996, 2,416 Tunisian nationals were issued visitors visas by the British Embassy in Tunis. A total of 406 visit applications were refused. The number of Tunisian applicants issued and refused visit visas worldwide and the numbers of those who were married is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Britain has a long-standing and close association with Nigeria and its people which continues. We are determined to ensure that their human rights are respected. We will need to see real progress towards the restoration of accountable, democratic government and respect for human rights, before our relations with the Nigerian regime can improve.

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if it is her policy to provide aid to Indonesia for projects of general application which treat East Timor as a province of Indonesia. [2268]

Clare Short: No aid given by us to Indonesia implies recognition of sovereignty over East Timor. Whether any future project of general application might affect East Timor would be a matter for consideration in each case.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the (a) allocated and (b) actual expenditure on each aid-and-trade provision project in Indonesia for each of the financial years since 1993–94. [2271]

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement about the future provision of aid-and-trade provision assistance to Indonesia. [2272]

Clare Short: As I explained to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby on 21 May, we will be reviewing all our expenditure programmes to ensure that we concentrate our efforts on poverty eradication. This means that we will be reviewing the Aid and trade Provision; and any review of ATP will naturally look at how it has operated in Indonesia, and whether it should continue to do so.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what training or assistance is currently being provided by her Department to the Indonesian police force; and if she will make a statement about the future provision of aid to the Indonesian police force. [2269]

Clare Short: Assistance to the Indonesian police force ended in March 1996. No further assistance is planned.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) what representations her Department will make at the forthcoming meeting of the Consultativie Group on Indonesia on (a) East Timor, (b) human rights and (c) good governance; [2273]

(2) what level of aid commitment her Department plans to make at the forthcoming meeting of the Consultative Group on Indonesia; and if she will make a statement about the extent to which the aid commitment will be dependent on the improvement of human rights in Indonesia and East Timor. [2274]

Clare Short: We shall take every opportunity to make known to the Indonesian Government our concerns about these issues. As to future commitments this will be covered by the review I propose to undertake. Hansard, Volume 294, Col. 93 of 21 May refers.

Military Equipment Sales

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement about the machinery which will be put in place to ensure that her Department is able to make representations to other departments on the impact on development of the sale of military equipment to developing countries (a) in general terms and (b) in respect of specific export licence applications. [2275]

Clare Short: As my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary announced on 22 May Hansard column 135, we have initiated the urgent review of the detailed criteria used in considering licence applications for the export of conventional arms. This review will include the role of all Departments involved, including my own Department. This new criteria will be made available to the House when the review is complete.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement about the steps she will take to ensure that assistance provided by her Department is not linked to the sale of military equipment to that country. [2276]

Clare Short: This Government will never link sales of military equipment to the provision of British development assistance, either directly or indirectly.

CABINET OFFICE

Cabinet Committees

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will list the Cabinet committees (a) of which he is a member and (b) which he chairs. [2560]

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Key Stage 2 Results Booklet

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many copies of the booklet "Primary School Performance Tables 1996 Key Stage 2 Results", were distributed to schools; and how much this cost. [2135]

Dr. Howells: An initial total of 1.12 million copies of the booklets were sent to primary and nursery schools in England on the date of publication at a cost of £264,000 for production and £236,000 for distribution. Schools were invited to request further copies according to their needs. Copies were also available to the public and it is not possible to separate schools' requests from those of the public.

Ms Estelle Morris: Following wide consultation, we will issue detailed new guidance for schools and local education authorities, including advice on good practice, to accompany implementation of the discipline provisions in the Education Act 1997. We will support locally devised projects to tackle behaviour problems under the grants for education support and training (GEST) programme, and will take more active steps to disseminate examples of good practice emerging from these projects.

School Deficits

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment whether school deficits, actual and projected have been included in the public sector borrowing requirement calculation, for (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98. [2206]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 6 June 1997]: The public sector borrowing requirement does not take account of the net deficit or surplus of funds held by schools.

TREASURY

Illegal Drugs

Mr. Spring: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to prevent the importation of illegal drugs into the United Kingdom. [923]

Dawn Primarolo: Lead responsibility for preventing the importation of illicit drugs rests with HM Customs and Excise. The department's current Management Plan, a copy of which has been placed in the Library, gives details of how it will be taking its work forward over the period to 1999–2000. Tackling drugs smuggling is the department's top anti-smuggling priority.

In recent years the department has moved to a system of flexible, mobile controls that are carefully targeted on the areas of greatest risk. It is making increased use of intelligence to target major criminals and drug smuggling organisations, and is currently implementing a range of measures to maximise its effectiveness in depriving drug traffickers of the proceeds of their crimes. A key element in the department's approach is close co-operation with other UK agencies involved in the fight against drugs, including the police. The department is also active in fostering co-operation with overseas law enforcement agencies and the business community. Other measures under development include improved risk assessment, further steps to optimise the deployment of resources and the provision of better information for anti-smuggling staff.

In 1996–97 the department prevented drugs to a street value of more than £1.5 billion from entering the UK, while dismantling or significantly disrupting 100 smuggling organisations.

Tax Returns

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of tax returns were received by the Inland Revenue more than 12 months after the date of issue. [2131]

Dawn Primarolo: An exercise carried out for the 1995–96 tax year indicated that the percentage of returns outstanding 12 months after issue was as follows:

Type of individual taxpayer served with a return	Percentage of returns still outstanding 12 months after issue
Directors, employees and pensioners	3
Self employed individuals	23

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of tax returns were received by the Inland Revenue (a) prior to 31 October, (b) between 1 November and 31 January and (c) between 1 February and 5 April following the end of the tax year. [2129]

Dawn Primarolo: An exercise conducted for the 1995–96 tax year indicated that the percentage of tax returns received was as follows:

Type of individual taxpayer served with a return	Percentage of tax returns received by Inland Revenue
	Prior to 31 October	1 November to 31 January	1 February to 5 April
Directors, employees and pensioners	86	9	2
Self employed individuals	62	13	2

Price Stability

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the requirements of the Maastricht treaty as regards price stability following monetary union. [499]

Mr. Gordon Brown: Article 105 of the EC Treaty states:

"The primary objective of the ESCB (European System of Central Banks) shall be to maintain price stability. Without prejudice to the objective of price stability, the ESCB shall support the general economic policies of the Community with a view to contributing to the achievement of the objectives of the Community as laid down in Article 2."

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the EU agricultural support budget is spent in (a) Germany, (b) France and (c) Italy. [2265]

Mr. Rooker: I have been asked to reply.

The Commission's provisional outturn figures for CAP expenditure in 1996 indicate the following percentages:

	Percentages

HEALTH

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the capital projects being undertaken by NHS trusts under the PFI and their value; and if he will make a statement. [1497]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

This information is presented in the form of two tables. The first table (Table 1) lists all National Health Service trusts with capital projects which have been approved to test for the Private Finance Initiative following the approval of an Outline Business Case (OBC) but have not yet had the final PFI proposal approved in a Full Business Case (FBC).

The second table (Table 2) lists all those NHS trusts which have had their PFI proposal approved in the Full Business Case and are at the stages between FBC approval and completion of the project (the list includes PFI capital projects which have been completed and are fully operational).

Both tables include only PFI projects with a capital value of £1 million or over. Information on projects with a capital value of below £1 million is not held centrally.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 22 May, Official Report, column 176, on the Private Finance Initiative (1) how many merchant banks attended the meetings between the Minister of State and the principal financiers; [1936]

(2) how many merchant banks contacted his Department between 2 May and 20 May, apart from those which took part in the meetings between the Minister of State and the principal financiers; [1934]

(3) if the meetings between the Minister of State and the principal financiers were held at the request of his Department. [1937]

Mr. Milburn: The meeting between the principal financiers involved in the Private Finance Initiative schemes at Dartford and Gravesham NHS Trust and Norfolk and Norwich Health Care NHS Trust and me and officials from the Department of Health was held at my request on 15 May. The financiers who attended the meeting were representatives from United Bank of Kuwait, Rabobank, BZW, Deutsche Morgan Grenfell, Innisfree, ABN Amro, and Midland Bank.

Officials from the Department of Health speak on a regular basis to many potential financiers interested in PFI projects.

Portsmouth Hospitals (NHS) Trust

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the purpose of his visit to Queen Alexandra Hospital, Portsmouth; who invited him; and when the visit was set up; [2398]

(2) if he will take steps to assist Portsmouth Hospitals NHS Trust to recover the money from other health trusts which is currently owed for patient care; and if he will conduct an inquiry into the causes of the Trust's deficit; [2400]

(3) what discussions he held on the budgetary problems of Portsmouth Hospitals Trust in the current financial year during the visit on 2 June; and if he will make a statement [2399]

Mr. Milburn: Following an approach by my hon. Friend the member for Portsmouth, North (Mr. Rapson) in whose constituency Queen Alexandra Hospital is situated, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State expressed an interest in visiting the hospital and was warmly welcomed by the Chairman and the Chief Executive of Portsmouth Hospitals NHS Trust on 2 June. The purpose of the visit was to tour the hospital, inspect its facilities and meet staff and patients. The arrangements were made during the week preceding the visit.

Portsmouth Hospitals NHS Trust had a very small deficit at the end of the last financial year, but is not currently in deficit. No monies are owed to the trust by other NHS trusts. Discussions during the visit centred around the contracting process, the level of costs incurred by NHS trusts and the internal market.

Methadone

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to issue new guidance for the prescribing of methadone. [2453]

Ms Jowell: Guidelines on clinical management of drug misuse and dependence were last revised by the Department of Health in 1991, and included information on the appropriate prescription and dispensing of methadone to drug misusers. These guidelines are currently being revised by an expert working group chaired by Professor John Strang, the Chief Medical Officer's consultant adviser on drug misuse. The new guidelines, which will include updated advice on the prescribing of methadone based on the latest research evidence, are expected to be issued to all doctors at the end of 1997.

Copies of the publication are available in the Library.

Weighted Capitation Funding

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the weighted elements of his Department's national weighted capitation formula for health funding; if evidence of population sparsity will be included in that review; and if he will make a statement. [2485]

Mr. Milburn: We will look at how resources are distributed across both secondary and primary care to ensure that these fully reflect local population needs and operate as fairly as possible.

We will continue with the research which has already been commissioned to investigate the possible extra costs associated with the provision of accident and emergency and ambulance services in sparsely populated rural areas. A report is expected in the autumn and the results will be carefully considered.

Ambulance Service (Paramedics)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is his policy that there should be a trained paramedic on all accident and emergency ambulances; what targets have been set relating to the provision of paramedics in the ambulance service; and what surveys have been carried out by his Department into the extent of such provision. [2429]

Mr. Boateng: It is the Department's policy that there should be a trained paramedic on every front line ambulance. There are some 6,500 paramedics working for National Health Service ambulance services in England and 32 of the 37 services are able to place a paramedic on every front line ambulance.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Tom King: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research has been commissioned and what estimates have been made by her Department, and what information presented to her, regarding the costs per annum to the DTI budget of the introduction of a minimum wage at (a) £3.50 an hour, (b) £4 an hour and (c) £4.40 an hour; and if she will make a statement. [2109]

Mrs. Beckett: We will ask the independent Low Pay Commission, before it reaches a recommendation on the level at which the national minimum wage might be set, to take into account all the economic circumstances, including its likely impact. I will not speculate about the possible effects of hypothetical levels before the Commission has had a chance to consider the issues.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Departmental Publications

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage by what means his Department makes available its publications in (a) Braille, (b) audio tape and (c) large print; and how this is publicised. [1665]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The Department produces both Braille and large print copies of publications where a demand has been identified or where there is an obligation to inform people of their rights and entitlements.

Tourism

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what evidence he has of the effect on the balance of payments in tourism of changes in the real exchange rate measured in terms of export unit values; what were imports and exports of tourism in cash terms and as a percentage of gross overseas products for each year since 1983, together with the balance of payments in tourism; what estimate he has made of the extent to which the figures are affected by changes in the real exchange rate since 1994 as measured by changes in the nominal exchange rate and in the real exchange rate weighted by the percentage change in import and export unit values in trade on manufactures with non-EC countries; and what is his estimate of the increase in output in the United Kingdom tourist industry in 1997 and 1998. [2127]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The level of inbound and domestic tourism in the UK is affected by a number of factors such as the quality and range of hotels (and other facilities) and the marketing of attractions, as well as the relative cost of the holidays in the UK and elsewhere. The Government are aware that the sterling exchange rate can affect the level of inbound and outbound tourism but do not make forecasts of the specific effects. The figures requested are shown in the following table:

	Exports of goods and services			Imports of goods and services
	Tourism credits (£ million)	Total export credits (£ million)	Tourism as a percentage of all exports	Tourism debits (£ million)	Total debits (£ million)	Tourism as a percentage of all imports	Balance of payments in tourism (£ million)

[1] Provisional.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment has been made of the effect of the sale of British Rail International Ltd. on United Kingdom tourism. [2007]

Mr. Clarke: None. The sale of British Rail International Ltd. (BRIL) to Grandes Lignes International SA, a wholly owned subsidiary of Societe National des Chemins de fer Francais, (SNCF), the French state-owned railway was only completed on 24 March 1997 after competitive tender.

National Lottery

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to allow purchasers of lottery tickets to determine which causes are supported as a consequence of that purchase; and if he will make a statement. [1955]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 5 June 1997]: The national lottery is the people's money and its proceeds should go to projects which the people support. To that end, the Government plan to establish a £1 billion fund for health education and other initiatives and to review the way lottery funds are distributed to the existing good causes. We will be publishing a White Paper setting out our proposals next month.

Television Licences (Pensioners)

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what estimate he has made of the cost of making television licences available to pensioners at a discount of (a) 75 per cent. (b) 50 per cent. and (c) 25 per cent. of the normal fee for colour and black and white sets; and if he will make a statement; [2169]

(2) what representations he has received from pensioner groups requesting him to exempt pensioners from having to buy a television licence; and if he will make a statement; [2170]

(3) what would be the annual cost of exempting all pensioners from having to buy a television licence; and if he will make a statement. [2281]

Mr. Fisher: The estimated annual cost, in lost licence fee revenue, of providing concessionary television licences for all pensioners would be:

	£ million
For a 25 per cent. discount	157
For a 50 per cent. discount	314
For a 75 per cent. discount	471
For free licences	628

Department of National Heritage records do not distinguish between representations from pensioner groups and those from other organisations or individuals, nor between those calling for free television licences for pensioners and those seeking a lesser concession. Since the Election, the Government have received 56 representations about television licence fees for pensioners and the concessionary television licence scheme, 25 of them from hon. Members. We have no plans to amend the concessionary television licence scheme.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

ENVIRONMENT AND THE REGIONS

Environmental Protection and Sustainability

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the initiatives taken by the Government since 1 May in respect of environmental protection and sustainability. [2084]

Angela Eagle: We will fulfil our Manifesto commitment to put the environment at the heart of decision-making across Government and we are considering the mechanisms which will deliver this. The framework for this was outlined in the speech my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister gave on 5 June at UNED-UK. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister will reinforce our international commitments when he addresses the special session of the United Nations General Assembly at its conference on sustainable development at the end of this month. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary stressed the importance of the environment in his mission statement. The Department for International Development has announced a commitment to promoting sustainable development through its activities.

In these first few weeks in Government it is right that we should build our policies carefully and coherently as well as imaginatively, and take time to consult widely about our future programme. But already we have begun to take steps to improve our environment. The appointment of my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister as Secretary of State for the Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, demonstrates our commitment to tackle environmental issues and sustainability in a more integrated way. We are setting up machinery to enable Departments to adopt a consistent approach to assessing the environmental consequences of policies. We are about to embark on discussions with the House authorities on a powerful new parliamentary environmental audit committee to scrutinise the sustainable development implications of policies and action across Government as promised in our Manifesto.

Already some significant action has been taken in specific fields. At our summit on water resources and supply last month we set out a 10 point plan to help secure reliable, efficient and environmentally sustainable water supplies. This includes setting new mandatory leakage targets, doing more to help customers conserve water and reviews of the charging and abstraction systems. We have launched a fundamental transport policy review to deliver an integrated transport policy. We have set in hand work to analayse what carbon savings the main policy areas could contribute towards our Manifesto target of reducing CO_2 emissions by 20 per cent. by 2010. This is the beginning of our action to promote environmental protection and sustainability, delivered in just a few weeks. Much more is to follow.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for legislation to strengthen the protection given to sites of special scientific interest. [2081]

Angela Eagle: The Government are currently considering the options for strengthening the protection of wildlife and sites of special scientific interest.

Green Ministers

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many meetings of Green Ministers have taken place since 1 May; and what plans there are for further meetings. [2085]

Angela Eagle: In fulfilling our commitment to put the environment at the heart of Government we are currently reviewing all the existing and potential machinery for effective delivery of our goal, including the network of Green Ministers that was established by the previous Administration. Final decisions have not yet been taken but one of the outputs of that review will be to ensure that every Department plays its full part and that Ministers in every Department are fully involved in the process.

Inquiry (Merry Hill)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will be in a position to decide on the inspector's recommendations relating to Merry Hill. [2162]

Mr. Raynsford: A decision will be issued shortly.

Mine Planning Applications

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many planning applications for new drift or deep mines have been submitted in England, Scotland and Wales in each of the past five years; which companies have submitted the applications; and what are the localities to which the applications relate. [2028]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 6 June 1997]: The number of planning applications for new deep mines in England in each of the past five years are as shown in the table. It is not possible to separate applications for deep and drift mines. Information concerning the companies who submitted the applications is not held centrally. The information relating to Scotland and Wales are matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales.

Council Tax

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many representations he has received from council tax payers in Somerset complaining about the level of the council tax levied by Somerset county council for 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [2201]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 6 June 1997]: None.

Planning Application (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish his decision on whether to allow Rotherham Metropolitan Borough Council to determine the planning application for a site at Catcliffe, South Yorkshire, to be called Waverley Leisure Park; and if he will make a statement. [2303]

Mr. Raynsford: I have discussed this case with ministerial colleagues; and, as a result of these discussions, we shall be seeking from the local planning authority further information. When we have this information, we will be able to decide whether the application should be called in or left to the authority to determine.

TRANSPORT

Cones Hotline

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the total cost of the cones hotline; how many calls were received; how many raised issues that resulted in remedial actions; and what was the cost of each of these calls as a percentage of the total costs. [1932]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The cones hotline operated from June 1992 until September 1995 when it was replaced by the Highways Agency information line. The cost of establishing and running the cones hotline prior to March 1994 is not available as, until then, calls were routed through the Department of Transport's general inquiry number. In the Financial year 1994–95, the cost of the dedicated service line was approximately £5,000. Staffing costs were met from within existing establishment and budgets. In the period April to September 1995 the cost of running the cones hotline is estimated at £20,000, including staff and call charges. The total number of calls received between June 1992 and September 1995 was 19,500. Approximately half the calls concerned traffic management (although only a small proportion were about traffic cones), and half were requests for information about road works or general queries about roads, planning policy and so on. Where appropriate, the Department took steps to alter the layout of road traffic cones, improve signposting at roadworks, review diversion routes, re-paint road markings and investigate road lighting at roadworks as a result of comments and complaints from hotline callers. The cost of each of these calls as a percentage of the total costs is not available.

Rail Services

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he requires the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising to notify him of any instances where permission is given to train operators not to run services set out in the Passenger Services Requirement; and if he has been notified by OPRAF that such permission to withdraw services has been given to GNER in respect of the east coast main line franchise. [2428]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No. The Franchising Director is responsible for ensuring compliance with franchise agreements, including the conditions of Passenger Service Requirements. I understand that, in the case of GNER, no permission has been given to withdraw services specified in the PSR. I understand that the hon. Gentleman has written to the Franchising Director who will no doubt provide him with a full explanation of the position.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue guidelines for the improvement of rail services on Sundays. [2455]

Ms Jackson: The Government want to see improvements to rail services generally, and is particularly keen to see enhancements made to off peak services including Sunday services. The Franchising Director is currently developing Criteria for the Appraisal of Support for Passenger Rail Services which will be used to assess, among other things, proposals for new subsidised services. The criteria will assist those bringing forward initiatives to enhance services. A number of franchisees—for example, Connex Rail and M40 Trains—have introduced new Sunday services as they committed to do in their franchise plans.

Felixstowe-Liverpool-Holyhead Rail Link

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is Government Policy concerning up-grading the Felixstowe-Liverpool-Holyhead rail link. [2178]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I understand that Railtrack, in consultation with Freightliner, is considering options for investment which would permit greater utilisation of the cross-country route between Felixstowe and the west coast main line, primarily for the transport of container freight traffic.

The Government have made it clear that they expect higher levels of investment in the railway network and is considering whether the current regulatory regime is strong enough to secure that.

Emergency Towing Vessels (Falmouth)

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for the long term for emergency towing vessels in Falmouth. [2176]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Coastguard Agency to carry out an assessment of the trials of Emergency Towing Vessels over the last three winters. These results are expected by the end of July 1997. Meanwhile, the Coastguard Agency has extended the present contracts for all three Emergency Towing Vessels to provide cover during the coming winter in the Dover Strait, North West Scotland and the Western Approaches from October 1997 to March 1998.

Bicycle Bells

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the present regulations regarding bicycle bells; what representations he has received on the subject; and if he will make a statement. [2288]

Ms Glenda Jackson: At present there are no requirements for bells on bicycles.

As part of a public consultation exercise on proposals to update the Pedal Bicycles (Safety) Regulations, general views were requested on the fitment of bells on pedal cycles. Strong support was shown for the mandatory fitment of bells on pedal cycles at the point of sale, and as stated in a reply to a question in another place—Official Report, House of Lords, 21 May 1997 column 1—we are looking at the issues as a matter of priority.

Eurostar Services

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his estimate of the start dates for Eurostar services north of London. [2177]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I understand form Eurostar (UK) Ltd. that it plans to start running regional Eurostar services later this year.

Rail Improvements

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on plans for improvements to railway signalling and tracks; and what plans he has to meet officials of Railtrack to discuss these issues. [2454]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Plans for improvements to track and signalling are a matter for Railtrack. We have made it clear that we expect higher levels of investment in the network and are considering whether the current regulatory regime is strong enough to secure that. My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has met the chairman of Railtrack to discuss a range of issues.

Public Transport

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he plans to take to promote leisure travel by public transport. [2456]

Ms Glenda Jackson: On 5 June my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions announced a fundamental review of transport policy—Official Report, column 226. The review will include measures to reduce car dependency and promote the use of public transport for all types of journey.

Light Rail Schemes

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to increase the funds available within his budget for the promotion of light rail schemes. [2405]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 6 June 1997]: Bids for funding light rail systems will be considered, on their merits, as part of the allocation of resources for funding transport capital expenditure by local authorities.

But, as my right hon. Friend The Deputy Prime Minister said recently, there needs to be a co-ordinated approach to transport infrastructure. Light rail will not work in isolation but needs to be part of an integrated package of measures to achieve our overall objectives including the reduction of car dependency.

Railtrack

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he last held meetings with representatives of Railtrack plc; and if he will make a statement. [2697]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister met the chairman of Railtrack on 21 May. The Government have made it clear that we expect higher levels of investment in the network. We are considering whether the current regulatory regime is strong enough to secure that.

Rail Ticket Sales

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the Rail Regulator to complete his report into impartial ticket sales; and whether this report will be published. [2661]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Rail Regulator is still considering how and when to publish the results of his "mystery shopping" surveys on rail ticket outlets.

Road Contracts

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has imposed a moratorium on the letting of new road contracts. [2298]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 6 June 1997]: No, but no new starts on national schemes are planned for this financial year. We are committed to a review of the roads programme, the details and scope of which will be announced shortly.

Bristol Channel

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he will take to improve the monitoring and regulation of shipping movements in the Bristol channel. [2638]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The marine Safety Agency will continue to keep under review the need for additional routeing measures around the United Kingdom coast through its programme of maritime traffic surveys. however, the Bristol channel was not an area of concern in Lord Donaldson's report "Safer Ships, Cleaner Seas" and there are no immediate plans for a traffic survey.

A comprehensive database—the COAST Ship Traffic Database—indicates an average of 22 merchant shipping movements daily through the Bristol channel comprising four tankers, 17 other cargo ships and one ferry. This is a low density compared to the 440 daily shipping movements in the busy Dover strait.

Ships in the Bristol channel, as elsewhere, must navigate in accordance with the detailed Rules of the International Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Constitutional Bills

Mr. Howard: To ask the President of the Council on which previous occasion or occasions a Bill of constitutional significance has been made subject to a timetable motion before the commencement of the Committee stage. [2153]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The Scotland Bill and the Wales Bill were the subject of allocation of time orders made on 16 November 1997, having been given a Second Reading on 14 and 15 November respectively.

Parliamentary Privilege

Ms Southworth: To ask the President of the Council what plans she has to establish a review of parliamentary privilege. [3046]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The Government believe that, in the context of their initiative to modernize Parliament, the time is now ripe for a general review of parliamentary privilege. Various aspects of the relationship between Parliament and the courts have given rise to difficulties in recent years, and the boundaries between them have been redrawn without any fundamental reappraisal of the kind of legal immunities which Parliament and its Members ought to enjoy at the end of the twentieth century.

The need for a review has become more pressing with today's announcement by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary of proposals for taking forward a general reform of the corruption statutes, which will include clarifying the law relating to bribery of Members of Parliament, as recommended by the Nolan Committee. The implications for parliamentary privilege, which would clearly be considerable, would need to be considered carefully in advance of the introduction of legislation.

Since this is a matter for Parliament and one which affects both Houses the Government believes that such a review could be undertaken most appropriately by a Joint Committee. Consultations are taking place about setting up the committee and about the terms of reference it might have.

The Government hope that it might be possible to complete this review by early next year.

SCOTLAND

Child Labour

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to ensure the enforcement of existing legislation to outlaw the illegal employment of school age children. [1540]

Mr. Wilson: We are considering how the existing system for protecting children who work might be improved.

Political and Special Advisors

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the name, (b) the salary, (c) the previous occupation and salary and (d) the terms and conditions of each political and special adviser in his Department; and what was the selection process used to appoint these persons. [2423]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 6 June 1997]: My Department employs 2 Special Advisers, Miss Wendy Alexander and Mr. Murray Elder. Immediately prior to appointment Miss Alexander was employed as a Senior Associate with Booz, Allen and Hamilton, International (UK) Ltd. and Mr. Elder already worked with me in an advisory capacity.

The terms and conditions of each appointment are set out in the draft model contract, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Special Advisers are paid within a range of £24,349 to £73,484. Their salaries are negotiated individually and are confidential within this range. Details of this and of previous salary are not provided in order to protect the privacy of the individuals concerned.

These are personal appointments made by me following consultation with the Permanent Head of my Department and the Prime Minister.

Scottish Screen

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total annual budget for Scottish Screen; and if he will provide a breakdown of the categories within that budget and the money allocated to each category. [2192]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 6 June 1997]: The cash limit for Scottish Screen in 1997–98 is £1,975,000. Scottish Screen forecasts that it will receive additional income of £711,000 making a total budget of £2.7 million. Budgets for the 8 departments have been prepared for Board approval.

Ms Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the names and designations of the persons within Scottish Screen with authority to make expenditure commitments on its behalf. [2193]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 9 June 1997]: The expenditure of Scottish Screen is the responsibility of the Chief Executive, Mr. John Archer. He delegates as appropriate to the heads of the departments of Scottish Screen.

Ms Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many meetings have been held by the Board of Scottish Screen since it inception. [2194]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 6 June 1997]: One: the first meeting of the Board of Scottish Screen was held on 5 June.

Ms Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how may times per year the Board of Scottish Screen is expected to meet; and how many times it is scheduled to meet in 1997. [2195]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 6 June 1997]: The Board of Scottish Screen will decide how frequently it will meet. Three further meetings are planned for 1997.

Ms Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were (a) the total number of people and (b) the names of the people sent to the Cannes Film Festival at the expense of Scottish Screen; and what was the expenditure incurred by Scottish Screen in respect of representation at that festival. [2197]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 6 June 1997]: Nine persons attended. Mr. John Archer, Ms Celia Stevenson, Mr. Eddie Dick, Ms Catherine Aitken, Mr. Oscar Van Heek, Ms Lesley Anderson, Ms Judy Anderson, Ms Emma Valentine and Ms Maxine Baker. The total includes four who were committed to attend the Festival by the organisation which employed them before April 1997. The expenditure incurred, including the launch of Scottish Screen at the Scottish film day, was approximately £20,000.

Ms Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions took place between the Government and the Opposition with regard to the appointment of the chairman of Scottish Screen. [2199]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 6 June 1997]: No consultation took place between the previous Administration and the then Opposition about this appointment.

Ms Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of the expenditure commitments made by Scottish Screen since its inception, listing the categories within the overall budget from which those commitments have been made. [2200]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 6 June 1997]: Scottish Screen has made the following commitments since its inception:

Grant to the Edinburgh Film Festival (this is in addition to £366,000 inherited commitments for Regional Film Theatres and Festivals	58,500
Cataloguing the Archive (contingent on a Lottery fund application)	41,200
Training awards	14,100
Moonstone International	17,500
Film Development Awards	16,250
Total	147,550

Ms Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current status of the Scottish Arts Council inquiry into the productions assisted by the Scottish Film Production Fund, with which the chairman of Scottish Screen was associated. [2209]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 6 June 1997]: The Scottish Arts Council is satisfied that all Lottery film awards have met the requirements of public accountability.

Ms Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangement the Scottish Office has put in place (a) to monitor the performance of Scottish Screen and (b) to make publicly available reports on the performance of Scottish Screen. [2208]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 6 June 1997]: The performance of Scottish Screen will be measured against the objectives set in its Corporate Plan which will be approved by Ministers each year. Scottish Screen's Annual Reports will reflect the extent to which the objectives set have been achieved.

Registers of Scotland

Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to reconstitute the Registers of Scotland Customer Advisory Group. [2877]

Mr. McLeish: My right hon. Friend has decided that the Customer Advisory Group is not the best way of meeting the need for a forum in which customers can seek to influence the Agency's activities, or for a body to provide independent advice on the Agency's strategic direction and has decided to discontinue it. Registers of Scotland now has a variety of ways of ensuring that customers of the Agency are fully consulted about its services and can seek to influence its activities. As regards a body to advise on the Agency's overall direction, my right hon. Friend proposes to set up a Registers of Scotland Strategic Advisory Group (ROSSAG) with the following remit:

"to advise the Secretary of State on the Agency's:

strategic and corporate planning;

its Annual Report and Accounts;

its major business developments.

and to provide advice to the Keeper on his forward planning".

The chairman and the membership will be representative of the following bodies and will be announced in due course.

The law Society of Scotland

The Scottish Consumer Council

Scottish Homes

The Council of Mortgage Lenders

The Convention of Scottish Local Authorities.

I am arranging for a copy of a revision to the Agency Framework Document reflecting this change to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

Opencast Development

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what communications he has received from the Harthill Armadale Blackridge Against Opencast in relation to proposed development near the M8 motorway; and what response he has sent. [1971]

Mr. Chisholm: My right hon. Friend has received two letters form Harthill Armadale Blackridge Against Opencast expressing concern about proposals for opencast coal mining near Harthill. Both correspondents received replies from The Scottish Office indicating that, if North Lanarkshire Council were minded to grant planning permission for the proposed development, the planning application would require to be notified to my right hon. Friend in order that he might decide whether or not he would determine the issue.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has in respect of the legal costs incurred by local authorities that reject planning applications by those who wish to develop opencast sites. [1972]

Mr. Chisholm: It is for local authorities out of the resources available to them to make provision for any legal costs that may be incurred in the exercise of their statutory planning responsibilities. There are no proposals to make an exception to this long established practice in relation to opencast developments.

Structural Funds

Mrs. Ewing: to ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has made to the European Commission in relation to the review of Objective 1 and Objective 5b structural funds. [2558]

Mr. Chisholm: In relation to the interim period re-assessments of the current 6 year Objective 1 and 5b programmes, the consultants' reports on the Scottish areas have all been received. They are being discussed by the Partnerships, who will produce any initial proposals for review of the programmes. I expect to put forward proposals to the European Commission late this Summer or in early Autumn.

The Government has not put forward detailed submissions to the Commission at this early stage of the Reform of the Structural Funds. We expect to put forward some proposals after the completion of the Inter-Governmental Conference.

Partnership Areas

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will extend the time scale for submissions on the programme for partnership area monitoring and evaluation guidance notes issued by the Scottish Office; and if he will make a statement. [2682]

Mr. Chisholm: I have no plans to do so. It is important for partnerships to put in place effective monitoring and evaluation systems as soon as possible, and they have accordingly been asked to submit monitoring and evaluation plans, together with annual reports, by the end of this month.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Urban Disturbances

20. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to meet the Association of Chief Police Officers to discuss youth-led urban disturbances. [934]

Mr. Michael: Both my right hon. Friend and myself have met the Association of Chief Police Officers since taking office and have discussed offending by young people with several chief officers. My right hon. Friend has made plans to discuss youth-led urban disturbances with ACPO in the near future.

Asylum and Immigration Act

21. Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce changes to the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996. [936]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We are reviewing the Act's provisions and will consider the options for change that best meet our Manifesto commitments.

Violent Crime

22. Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the OECD countries in which there has been a rise in violent crime equivalent to that in England and Wales in the last 10 years. [937]

Mr. Michael: The latest information available shows that over the period 1987–95 the number of violent crimes recorded by the police rose by 60 per cent. in England and Wales, of the 13 OECD countries for which information is available only France (71 per cent.) and New Zealand (80 per cent.) had a higher percentage increase while the lowest increase was Italy at 4 per cent.

European Convention on Human Rights

23. Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to incorporate the European Convention on Human Rights into domestic law. [935]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We will introduce a Bill for this purpose in this Session of Parliament.

Drink-related Crime

24. Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to deal with drink-related crime. [938]

Mr. Michael: We plan to take early action to tackle drink-related crime including placing a new duty on local authorities and the police together to develop local community safety programmes. Our plans include introducing a tougher licensing regime, encouraging firmer measures to deal with offenders and promoting greater use of programmes aimed at preventing alcohol-related crime.

Youth Crime

25. Mr. Bernard Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he intends to take to prevent children turning to crime; and if he will make a statement. [939]

Mr. Michael: We are pursuing a wide ranging programme of activities to reform and speed up the youth justice system and to prevent youth crime. We will introduce child protection orders to ensure that young children are not left to roam the streets unsupervised at nights, and a new parental responsibility order to ensure that parents face up to their responsibility for their children's misbehaviour and are given the help they need to deal with it.

Asylum Applications

26. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to reduce the current backlog of asylum applications awaiting determination. [940]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As we said in our Manifesto, the system for dealing with asylum seekers is expensive and too slow.

We are critically evaluating all aspects of asylum law and procedures. This includes the 1996 Act. Reducing the backlog of cases which we inherited is an important element of that process.

The taxpayer and the asylum seeker are entitled to decisions which are swift and fair.

Prisons (Illegal Drugs)

27. Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to restrict the availability of illegal drugs in prisons. [941]

Mr. George Howarth: The Prison Service is taking a number of measures to reduce the availability of illegal drugs in prisons. These include the use in many establishments of non-contact or closed visits for prisoners known or reasonably suspected to have used drugs, improved liaison with local police forces over the charging of visitors who attempt to smuggle drugs, and the increased use of closed circuit television in visit areas. In addition some 70 establishments have dogs trained in detecting drugs, while others have arrangements for the regular loan of such dogs.

Police Constables

28. Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase the number of police constables in England and Wales. [942]

Mr. Michael: It is for individual chief constables and police authorities to determine the number of constables in each force, having regard to the resources available to them. The Government will relieve the police of unnecessary bureaucratic burdens to allow chief constables to put more officers back on the beat.

Prison Service

29. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the management of the Prison Service. [943]

Ms Joyce Quin: We pledged in our Manifesto to take proper Ministerial responsibility for the Prison Service.

There are no plans to end the status of the Prison Service as an executive agency within the Home Office. But I intend to examine the structure and organisation of the Prison Service and the Home Office's policy role, taking account of the Director General's organisational review which is already under way.

Arrested Persons (Heroin Addicts)

30. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the proportion of heroin addicts among all those who are arrested. [944]

Mr. George Howarth: It is difficult to quantify the proportion of offenders addicted to drugs or dependent on them. The Home Office has a research programme designed to shed further light on the links between drugs and crime. It includes a study of drug use by samples of people arrested by the police in various cities. Preliminary results from this study point to a higher level of drug taking by arrestees than expected. However, the study is still incomplete; the university of Cambridge will be delivering a report to the Home Office in October, which is likely to be published around the end of the year.

Police Authorities (Funding)

31. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the method by which money is allocated to police authorities. [945]

Mr. Michael: I intend to give careful consideration to the funding formula by which resources are allocated between police authorities, to consider what modifications might be made both for the short and the longer term.

Young Offenders

32. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his Department's plans to shorten the period between arrest and sentencing for young offenders. [946]

Mr. Michael: We are taking immediate action to speed up proceedings against young offenders. The Crime and Disorder Bill will include reforms to the youth justice system and we aim to halve the average time between arrest and sentencing for young offenders.

Crime Victims (Rights)

33. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to strengthen the rights of victims of crime; and if he will make a statement. [947]

Mr. Michael: We are committed to helping victims of crime and to taking action to redress the balance of the criminal justice system in favour of the victim. We will ensure that all the criminal justice agencies give a high priority to treating victims with sensitivity and respect, listening to their views and improving the services they provide to victims. We will ensure that victims of crime are informed of progress in their case—if they want to be—and that, following our reorganisation of the Crown Prosecution Service, local Crown Prosecutors become more involved in informing victims of their decisions.

We are also committed to providing greater protection for victims in rape and serious sexual offence trials and for those subject to intimidation, including witnesses. We shall be bringing forward detailed proposals on this in due course. Victims will also benefit from our proposals to tackle violence in our society and for speeding up justice.

Alcopops

34. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider the banning of alcopops. [948]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government have make clear their concerns about underage drinking. A Ministerial Group on Alcopops has been set up and had its first meeting on 22 May. We are looking to the industry to take urgent action. If there is no satisfactory response, we shall be considering a range of options for Government action, up to and including a complete ban.

37. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reduce the consumption of alcopop-type drinks by those under 18 years. [951]

Mr. Howarth: The Government have made clear its concern about underage drinking. A Ministerial Group on Alcopops has been set up and had its first meeting on 22 May. We are looking to the industry to take urgent action. If there is no satisfactory response, we shall be considering a range of options for Government action.

Serious Criminal Offences

36. Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the number of people convicted for the first time of a serious criminal offence since 1 May. [950]

Mr. Michael: The information requested is not available.

The latest figures available are for 1994 and it is estimated that some 2,300 persons were convicted for the first time of a "standard list" offence each week.

Such offences, which include all indictable and some of the more serious summary offences, are listed in appendices 4 and 5 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1995".

Minimum Mandatory Sentences

35. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has in respect of minimum mandatory sentences for career burglars and dealers in hard drugs. [949]

Mr. Michael: We believe tough punishments are appropriate for career burglars and dealers in hard drugs.

Crime

38. Ms McDonagh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reports he has received regarding comparisons between the incidence of crime in England and Wales and that in other countries. [952]

Mr. Michael: I have recently received a draft report on key findings of the 1996 International Crime Victimisation Survey which shows that England and Wales are top of the international league for levels of burglary, car crime and violent crime. The full report of the survey is expected in July and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Human Rights

39. Mr. Lawrie Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve the United Kingdom's record on human rights. [953]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We will incorporate the European Convention on Human Rights into domestic law. This will allow people to enforce their human rights in British courts, and will promote a greater awareness of human rights issues in society as a whole.

Probation Service

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the resources available to the probation service. [928]

Ms Joyce Quin: We are reviewing a number of aspects of Home Office funding, including that of the probation service. We have not reached a considered view about the appropriate level of central Government provision.

European Convention on Human Rights

Mr. Patrick Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to incorporate the European convention on Human Rights into domestic law. [1062]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As announced in the Gracious Speech, we will introduce a Bill for this purpose in this Session of Parliament. This will keep the commitment made in the Labour Manifesto.

Firearms Compensation Scheme

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the differences between the draft Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997 compensation scheme laid before the House on 3 June and the scheme laid on 22 May. [2491]

Mr. Michael: With two minor exceptions in the main body of the draft scheme, the changes correct factual errors in the items and values listed in the annexes. Changes have been made as a result of comments received from the industry. A few listings were wrongly included and do not relate to items covered by the 1997 Act. In other cases more general generic descriptions have been given, replacing specific brand names. These changes improve the draft scheme, incorporating some information received after the initial version of the scheme was laid.

Referring to the numbering of the latest version of the draft Scheme the alternations are as follows:

Main text

Paragraph 1

The sentence now ends more specifically with the words "..... the date on which section 1 comes into force."

Paragraph 17

The FCS is defined as the "Home Office Firearms Compensation Section." Previously there was no specific definition.

Mr. Michael: I am considering the future of the closed circuit television Challenge Competition as part of our review of existing expenditure programmes. A decision on whether there will be another round of the competition in 1998–99 will be made later in the summer.

Criminal Record Certificates

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to implement part V of the Police Act 1997; and what plans he has to provide for the waiving or abatement of charges to volunteers for the certificates referred to in the Act. [2383]

[2676]

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take to reform and consolidate the law on corruption with particular reference to bribery of hon. Members. [3047]

Mr. Straw: The Government are committed to tackling corruption in all areas of public and private life, including the bribery of hon. Members.

I am publishing today a statement on reform of the corruption statutes for consultation. A copy is available in the Library. The Law Commission will be producing proposals for reform of the law in this area later in the year.

I shall consider carefully the results of all of these exercises, together with any further recommendations which the Nolan Committee may make in relation to the criminal law.

I expect to make a further statement on the reform of the law in this area early next year.

.22 Calibre Pistols (Deaths)

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been killed with .22 calibre pistols in the last 10 years. [1630]

Mr. Michael: In the past, information on the calibre of firearms used in homicide offences has not been collected centrally in England and Wales as a matter of routine.

However, a special exercise was conducted last year, and subsequently updated this year, to find out further information on homicides involving firearms.

This covered the three years 1992 to 1994, and out of a total of 90 homicides involving the use of a handgun, information was available in 76 cases to show that seven persons were killed with a .22 calibre handgun. It is not known, however, what type of .22 cartridge was used.

For the remaining 69 cases, the calibre of the handguns involved, as reported by the police forces concerned, is as follows:

Calibre	Number of handguns
9mm	12
.32	20
.38	17
.357	4
.375	1

WALES

Teachers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the availability of full-time posts for unemployed teachers in Wales. [2002]

Mr. Hain: Local authorities and grant-maintained schools reported that, as at January 1997, there were 102 vacancies for full-time teachers in maintained secondary, primary and special schools in Wales. This represents less than 0.5 per cent. of teachers employed by local authorities and grant-maintained schools in Wales. It is open to any suitably qualified teacher to apply for appointment to a vacant post in Wales.

Red Barn Development

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement on the decision of Gwent health authority to cancel the proposed Red Barn development; [2374]

(2) what role the private finance initiative has played in the Red Barn proposal at Nevill Hall hospital, Abergavenny. [2376]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Gwent Community Health Trust sought private sector interest under the Private Finance Initiative as required by the Department. A preferred bidder was selected and negotiations had been continuing.

Gwent Health Authority's decision was taken because costs had increased, value for money was not demonstrated sufficiently, and the proposals no longer met the demand for services. The Authority will now discuss needs with local people, local authorities and other interested parties. This is a matter for the Health Authority and they have to decide on the most cost effective way of delivering services for their communities.

Pen y Fal Hospital

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what receipts accrued to his Department from the closure of Pen y Fal Hospital, Abergavenny. [2372]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The Pen y Fal Hospital site has not yet been sold and no receipts have accrued to the department.

Gwent Community Health Trust are at present marketing the major part of the site and interested parties have been asked to prepare a bid.

Chepstow Community Hospital

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the proposed Chepstow community hospital. [2375]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Glan Hafren NHS Trust in collaboration with local GPs, and with the support of Gwent Health Authority, are working on a proposal for a new Neighbourhood Health Unit to be built on the St. Lawrence Hospital site at Chepstow. The unit will provide for a range of primary, continuing, mental health, diagnostic and acute services. The development is a Private Finance Initiative and the Trust are currently in the final stages of negotiation with the private sector consortium.

Ovarian Cancer

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the availability of screening programmes via NHS hospitals for ovarian cancer in Wales. [2189]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I have made no specific assessment of the availability of screening programmes for ovarian cancer. Professional advice is that there is currently no screening test assessed as effective which can be used on a population basis.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the future of the private finance initiative in relation to the national health service. [2379]

Mr. Win Griffiths: As my hon. Friend knows, the Government is currently undertaking an urgent review of the Private Finance Initiative. This is being led by the Paymaster General. In addition, officials in the Welsh Office Health Department are working with their colleagues in the Department of Health to determine what changes are necessary to ensure the PFI delivers the range of health care facilities which so far it has failed to do. As a first step, we have introduced the NHS (Private Finance) Bill in order to provide the necessary assurance to the private sector that Trusts can enter into PFI contracts. This should break the current logjam of projects.

We expect all of this work to be completed quickly. The review led by my hon. Friend will report by 13 June. Officials are working to a slightly longer timetable; and if all goes well, the Bill will be enacted before the summer recess. We are determined to give the PFI a new impetus so that we can start building new health facilities to carry us through to the 21st Century.

Chepstow Bypass

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the proposed outer bypass for Chepstow. [2369]

Mr. Hain: A proposal has been put forward by a private developer for an outer bypass for Chepstow partly funded by residential development on the English side of the border. Most of the route is in England and will require planning approval from local authorities in the area.

DEFENCE

Navy Personnel

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Navy personnel are currently employed ashore; and what were the equivalent figures in (a) 1981 and (b) 1988. [2395]

Dr. John Reid: Available statistics show that 25,252 Naval Service personnel were employed ashore at home and overseas on 1 April 1997; 44,352 on 31 March 1988; and 50,749 on 31 March 1981.

National Service

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the impact on occupational pensions rights of interrupted employment resulting from national service; and if he will make a statement. [2141]

Dr. John Reid: Public Service pension schemes allow members who had their careers interrupted by national service to credit that period towards their pension. The impact of National Service on the pension rights of members of occupational schemes outside the public service will depend upon the rules of the relevant scheme and the effect of the application of Inland Revenue limits on final retirement benefits.

European Court of Human Rights

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make representations to the European Court of Human Rights to bring forward the date of the appeal tribunal concerning McGinley and EEV UK. [1969]

Dr. John Reid: I have no plans to make representations to the European Court of Human Rights to bring forward its hearing of the case being brought by McGinley and Egan. It is, of course, open to the two applicants to do so.

Departmental Land

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the acreage of land (a) owned and (b) leased by his Department; and what were the equivalent figures in (i) 1974 and (ii) 1979. [2393]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Estate Organisation Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about MOD land holdings as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Estate Organisation.

The details of the land held by the Ministry of Defence at 31 March 1974, 1979 and 1997 are as follows:

I hope this is helpful.

Gallium Removal

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to undertake the removal of gallium from the military plutonium stockpile; and what assessment he has made of the discharges to the environment arising from this removal. [1785]

Mr. Spellar: When plutonium is returned from service use the gallium is removed in conditions designed to protect both the operators involved and the environment at large. As far as this Department is aware, there have been no discharges to the environment arising from such removal.

Regimental Strengths

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was (a) the establishment and (b) the nominal strength on 1 May of (i) The Duke of Wellington's Regiment, (ii) The Green Howards, (iii) The Prince of Wales's Own Regiment of Yorkshire, (iv) The Light Infantry, (v) The Royal Dragoon Guards, (vi) The Light Dragoons and (vii) The 1 Royal Tank Regiment. [2014]

Dr. John Reid: The establishments and strengths are as follows:

MOD Police, Colchester

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Ministry of Defence police constables on the complement were operating full time within the Colchester garrison on (a) 1 January and (b) 1 June; and what is the number planned for 1 October 1997. [2078]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Constable and Chief Executive of the Ministry of Defence Police Agency. I have asked him to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from M. J. A. Smallwood to Mr Bob Russell, dated 9 June 1997:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about Ministry of Defence Police at Colchester Garrison, on behalf of the Chief Constable/Chief Executive of the Ministry of Defence Police Agency, as this falls into his area of responsibility. The Chief Constable/Chief Executive is away from the office at present.

There were 30 uniformed MOD Police officers of the rank of constable deployed at Colchester Garrison on 1 January and 25 on 1 June 1997. Based on current planning assumptions we anticipate that there will be 21 MDP constables deployed in and around the Colchester Garrison area on 1 October 1997.

Flagship Training Ltd.

Mr. Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the proposal to transfer the running of naval training to Flagship Training Ltd.; and if he will consider allowing affected employees to remain within his Department for the foreseeable future. [2005]

Dr. John Reid: No proposals exist to transfer the running of Royal Naval training to the private sector. The management and control of RN training will remain the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency (NRTA)/Flag Officer Training and Recruiting and the Commanding Officers of his shore training establishments.

Proposals are currently being considered for the transfer of a number of, mainly support, NRTA activities to Flagship Training Ltd. which would involve the transfer of some employees under the provisions of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 (TUPE).

All Agency employees who may be affected by these proposals have been given the opportunity to register a preference to stay within the Department. Every effort is being made to find alternative posts for those who have registered such a preference.

I will write to the hon. Member when a final decision has been taken on the activity transfer.

Eurofighter Project

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his discussion with the German Minister of Defence on the future of the Eurofighter Project, if he will make a statement on the outcome of his meetings and give details of specific assurances he received about future German funding of the production investment and production phases of the project. [2493]

Mr. Spellar: When my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence met the German Defence Minister on 4 June in Bonn he pointed out that the Government was firmly committed to the Eurofighter programme and that the UK wanted to proceed rapidly to the production phase. He confirmed that the UK was ready to sign the relevant Memoranda of Understanding now. In turn Herr Rühe made it very clear that Germany needed and wanted Eurofighter. He hoped to secure Cabinet approval to proceed to the production phase of Eurofighter on 11 July when the German Cabinet meets to consider the 1998 Federal Budget. The approval of the Bundestag Parliament will then need to be obtained as soon as possible thereafter in advance of signature of the relevant Memoranda of Understanding by the four partner nations.

When my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister met Chancellor Kohl in Bonn on 6 June, the Chancellor made very clear his personal commitment to the Eurofighter programme and his aim to secure the German Government's commitment to the production phase in July within the framework of the draft 1998 Federal budget.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Broiler Chickens

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to review the present stocking density for table broiler chickens. [1902]

Mr. Morley: A maximum stocking density of 34 kg/m^2 is recommended for broilers in the welfare code on domestic fowls. We will consider whether this provision needs changing in the light of (a) the results of scientific work commissioned following a recommendation from the Farm Animal Welfare Council (FAWC) in 1992 and (b) the further advice FAWC has undertaken to give when those scientific results are available.

Laying Hens

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for a total ban on all cage systems for laying hens throughout the EU. [1903]

Mr. Morley: The Government will be seeking substantial improvements to the EU welfare requirements for laying hens during the forthcoming review by the Council of Ministers of the battery hens directive 88/166/EEC. The detailed objectives will be determined in the light of the Farm Animal Welfare Council's report on the welfare of laying hens, which we expect to be published shortly.

Ostriches

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to ban the keeping of ostriches on United Kingdom farms; and if he will make a statement. [1904]

Mr. Morley: I am aware of the concerns expressed about ostrich farming in this country. This Government are committed to promoting animal welfare and intend to look closely at the welfare implications of this developing industry.

Fisheries

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he will be taking to renew the six mile and twelve mile fisheries limits. [2293]

Mr. Morley: The current restrictions on foreign fishing vessels within our six and 12 mile fisheries limits will continue to apply until 31 December 2002. The Government are committed to securing their renewal after 2002 as part of the process of reviewing the Common Fisheries Policy.

Beef Exports

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representation his Department has made to the European Commissioner for Agriculture about lifting the ban on the export of beef. [2526]

Mr. Rooker: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food met Commissioner Fischler on 12 May and their discussions covered, amongst other matters, the way forward on lifting the export ban. It was stressed that the Government will respect the framework set by the Florence Agreement and work constructively with the Commission and through the European Parliament on making progress on this issue. However, it is for Madame Bonino, the Consumer Health and Food Safety Commissioner, whom my right hon. Friend also met in May, to arrange scientific consideration of the UK's proposals for an Export Certified Herd Scheme. The results of this scrutiny are expected later this month.

ADAS

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the present situation with regard to ADAS; and if he will make a statement. [2632]

Mr. Morley: The sale of ADAS to a management and employee buy out team was completed on 1 April 1997 and it is now trading as a private limited company. ADAS's statutory functions and work directly concerned with the payment of grants and subsidies were not included in the privatisation and are now being carried out by the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency, an executive agency of MAFF and the Welsh Office.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what allergic reactions have been established as being caused by the introduction of genetically engineered material into the food chain. [1961]

Mr. Rooker: We have no evidence that any allergic reactions have resulted from the genetic modification of food approved for use in the UK. All such foods are fully assessed by the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes for safety, including allergic potential, before being permitted to enter the food supply.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the possible increase in (a) resistance to antibiotics and (b) severe immune reactions from the use of genetically engineered viruses as delivery vehicles in the generation of transgenic plants and animals. [1962]

Mr. Rooker: None of the GMOs released into the environment in the UK have involved the use of genetically modified viruses as delivery vehicles in the generation of transgenic plants and animals. The use of antibiotic resistance markers is kept under close review by the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy regarding the transfer of animal genes into plants; and what consultations his Department has held with vegetarian groups and religious groups on this issue. [1963]

Mr. Rooker: In 1992 the Polkinghorne Committee was set up to consider ethical issues associated with genetically modified (GM) foods. Following extensive consultation with interested parties, including religious and vegetarian groups, the Committee issued a report, a copy of which was deposited in the Library of the House.

Any plant containing animal genes which is intended for food use would need to be approved and labelled in accordance with the EC Novel Foods Regulation (258/97) before it could be sold to the public. As part of this process a thorough safety assessment would be carried out by the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes and, if the plant was also intended to be grown in Europe, by the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment. To date no applications for plants of this type have been received.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy regarding the use in food of genetically engineered bacteria to produce the supplement tryptophan. [1964]

Mr. Rooker: The addition of tryptophan to food is prohibited under the Tryptophan in Food Regulations 1990.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy in respect of crops engineered to produce their own pesticides. [1967]

Mr. Rooker: Before any genetically modified crop can be marketed in Europe it requires a marketing consent under Directive 90/220/EEC or approval under the EC novel foods regulation 258/97 based on a detailed safety assessment. Provided that such a consent or approval is given, I cannot see any reason why the use of such crops should not be allowed.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to introduce a moratorium on the release of genetically modified organisms. [1968]

Mr. Rooker: No. The release of genetically modified organisms is only permitted following risk assessment in accordance with Directive 90/220/EEC or the EC novel foods regulation (258/97) and I am satisfied that this procedure provides a sufficient safeguard as regards public health and the environment.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to introduce full disclosure labelling for genetically engineered foods. [1959]

Mr. Rooker: I am committed to ensuring that consumers are able to make an informed choice when purchasing food. I therefore intend to press at European level for the labelling of all foods that may contain ingredients which have been genetically modified.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of genetically engineered foods. [1960]

Mr. Rooker: The EC novel foods and novel food ingredients regulation 258/97 lays down an EU wide pre-market approval system for novel foods and novel food ingredients including those containing or produced from genetically modified organisms (GMOs). Provided that there are no safety concerns, and they are appropriately labelled, I see no reason why these types of foods and ingredients should not be sold to the public.

Forestry Commission (Woodlands)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many acres of woodland are managed currently by the Forestry Commission in each of the standard regions of England. [2683]

Mr. Morley: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by Forest Enterprise. I have asked its Chief Executive, Dr. Bob McIntosh, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Bob McIntosh to Mr. Hugh Bayley, dated 9 June 1997:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply to your Question about the area of woodland currently managed by the Forestry Commission in England.(2683)

The Forestry Commission's woodlands in England are divided between two Regions and the total area of land managed by each at 31 March 1996 was:-

North and East England: 159,171 hectares

South and West England: 106,064 hectares

The Forestry Commission's Annual Report for 1995–96 provides greater detail, on pages 106–107, including the area managed by each Forest District together with a map of the boundaries of the administrative regions. A copy is in the library of the House.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Departmental Computer Systems

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to ensure that her Department's computer systems are millennium compliant; and if she will make a statement. [1240]

Mr. Murphy: All Northern Ireland Departments are actively working on the millennium problem. Departments are currently identifying which systems will be liable to failure, and will initiate projects to take the necessary remedial action as a matter of priority.

Nursing Care

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she will extend legislation to Northern Ireland to permit local authorities in England and Wales to pay for residential nursing care in Northern Ireland and vice versa. [1316]

Mr. Worthington: The legislation governing the provision of residential and nursing home care, both in Northern Ireland and England and Wales, does not permit authorities to arrange to pay for placements within each other's territories. I have asked officials to consider, with the Department of Health, ways of overcoming this difficulty.

Civil Service

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what restrictions have been placed on Sir David Fell, the resigning head of the Northern Ireland civil service in relation to taking up commercial employment; and if he will be paid the standard retirement pension in advance of the normal civil service retirement age. [1320]

Mr. Murphy: Sir David Fell sought permission from the Advisory Committee on Business Appointments to take up the post of non-executive Chairman of the Northern Bank and non-executive Director in its parent, National Australia Bank (UK) Ltd. The Committee's recommendation to the previous Secretary of State was that the application should be approved, subject only to the automatic three month waiting period for Permanent Secretaries. Accordingly, there will be a three month gap between Sir David's retirement on 30 September 1997 and the commencement of his employment with the Northern Bank on 1 January 1998.

Sir David Fell is retiring from the Northern Ireland Civil Service before normal retirement age. The terms of his pension will be strictly within the provisions of the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme.

Tower Hill, Armagh

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated final cost of works at Tower Hill, Armagh, for the Headquarters of the Southern Area Health Board; and how many showers are provided in these buildings for (a) members of staff and (b) board members. [1291]

Mr. Worthington: The cost, including fees, of refurbishment work at Tower Hill, Armagh, for the headquarters of the Southern Area Health Board was £1,190,000. There is one shower provided for the use both of staff and board members.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will review the incapacity benefit all work test and make it her policy to replace it with a work-related scheme. [1322]

Mr. Worthington: The Secretary of State for Social Security is considering the evidence submitted to the Social Security Select Committee's review of incapacity benefit. In keeping with the principle of parity in social security matters any changes introduced in Great Britain will be mirrored in Northern Ireland.

Family Law Act

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate she has made of the cost of the academic inquiry into the possibility of extending the Family Law Act 1996 to Northern Ireland; and for what reason that inquiry was commissioned. [1321]

Mr. Murphy: The Family Law Act 1996 contains provisions relating to domestic violence and occupation of the family home, and the grounds for divorce. After examining the practicalities of direct extension, it was considered that proceedings by way of Order in Council would produce the most coherent and easily understood provisions on domestic violence.

As regards the ground for divorce, it was considered that most information and public debate in the way that current divorce law is used in Northern Ireland was required before a decision could be taken on the way forward. It was for this reason that a major research project into divorce practice and procedure was commissioned and Ministers will await the outcome of that research before formulating any proposals for reform of the divorce law in Northern Ireland. The total cost of the research project is estimated at £50,000.

Stalking

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she plans to introduce an Order in Council bringing Northern Ireland legislation on stalking into line with the Protection from Harassment Act 1997. [1319]

Mr. Ingram: The Protection from Harassment (Northern Ireland) Order 1997 was made under the negative resolution procedure at Privy Council on 8 April and laid before Parliament on 14 May. Neither the Protection from Harassment Act nor the Order in Council have been commenced. It is my intention to introduce the Northern Ireland legislation simultaneously with the commencement of that for England and Wales.

Disability

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make it her policy to adopt a social model of disability in framing all future and amending previous relevant legislation and guidance; and if she will make a statement. [1664]

Mr. Worthington: Our manifesto commits us to establishing "comprehensive, enforceable civil rights for disabled people against discrimination in society or at work, developed in partnership with all interested parties". We shall be consulting and developing our proposals in partnership with disability organisations, employers, employers' organisations and trade unions. Interested bodies in Northern Ireland will be included in the consultation. An essential issue will be the definition of disability. It is not appropriate for me to pre-empt the outcome of that consultation.

Retail Stores

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what dates public hearings were held for the proposed retail stores at (a) D5 Suite Harbour Exchange, East Belfast, (b) Knocknagoney Site, East Belfast, (c) Armagh Road, Newry, (d) Beltrim Road, Lisburn and (e) Strand Road, Londonderry; and when in each case she expects decisions to be announced. [1292]

Mr. Murphy: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Planning Service under its Chief Executive, Mr. W. Stewart. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from W. Reavie to Mr. John Taylor, dated 27 May 1997:

[2413]

Dr. Mowlam [holding answer 6 June 1997]: Subject to the approval of the Prime Minister, I propose to appoint Mr. Nigel Warner and Ms Anna Healy as my special advisers. Mr. Warner was previously my researcher in the House of Commons and Ms Healy was the senior Parliamentary Press Officer for the Labour Party before joining the Press Office of the Leader of the Opposition before the last General Election.

Police Complaints Commission

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she will lay before Parliament the 1996 annual report of the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland; and if she will make a statement. [2851]

Dr. Mowlam: The 1996 Annual Report of the Independent Commission for Police Complaints is being laid before Parliament today.

The Report, which follows the format of previous years, comments on the work of the Commission in 1996. It includes an introduction from the then Chairman, James Grew, and chapters on the supervision of investigation of complaints against the police and on the Commission's role in disciplinary procedures arising from those complaints. It also has the usual statistical and financial sections.

Following 1995's reduction in the number of complaints, by 12 per cent. from the 1994 level, there was an increase of 9 per cent. in 1996. The Report states that a good deal of this increase arose from complaints made about public order policing last summer. The overall number of complaints, however, at 2,545, is similar to that seen in the early 1990s. The Commission supervised 390 cases, the highest number since its creation. The number and proportion of complaints informally resolved continue to rise, with 22.3 per cent. in 1996 compared to 18.3 per cent., 15.7 per cent. and 10 per cent. in the previous three years. The number of cases arising from the holding centres, 85, was the lowest figure since the creation of the Commission.

I should like to thank the Members and staff of the Commission for supervising a greater number of cases than ever before, and to encourage them to keep up their excellent work. In addition, I think it appropriate to record my thanks to Jim Grew for his service to the ICPC over almost a decade. His contribution has been outstanding and I am grateful to him. I wish his successor, Paul Donnelly, who has written an insert to the Report, on the way ahead on police complaints following Dr. Hayes' review of the complaints system, every success. His first challenge will be in seeing the Commission through the changes that will result from Dr. Hayes' proposals. I look forward to working in partnership with Paul Donnelly and the other bodies directly affected by the proposals in taking forward these important changes.

[1] Average size of one teacher classes as taught during a single selected period on the census day.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the average class size in each primary and secondary school, grant-maintained and local authority controlled, in the Spelthorne constituency on 31 March or the latest available date before that. [2566]

Mr. Byers: Information on class sizes for individual schools is not published centrally.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects the Form 7 figures to have been processed to provide class size information as at January 1997; and if he will make a statement. [3033]

Mr. Byers: Provisional figures on class sizes in maintained primary and secondary schools as at January 1997 are expected to be published in a Statistical Press Notice at the end of this month.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish the evidence he has received which suggests that small class sizes deliver better educational standards; and if he will make a statement. [2698]

Mr. Byers: The electorate have already signalled their support for our policy to bring the educational benefits of smaller classes to all infant pupils, rather than just the few whose parents have paid for smaller classes in the independent sector. Common sense and research evidence here and notably in the United States indicate that class size is a key factor in the early years of education when pupils master the basics. Her Majesty's Chief Inspector has said in the Ofsted report on class size (1995)

"small class sizes are of benefit in the early years of primary education."

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if the undertaking given by the Minister for School Standards on 22 May, Official Report, column 824, that the new Education (Schools) Bill will lead to a reduction in class size for every five, six and seven-year-old in the country applies irrespective of the current size of class of which a child is a member. [2704]

Mr. Byers: Our pledge is to reduce class sizes for all five, six and seven-year-olds to 30 or below by the end of this Parliament.

Single Parents

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many extra staff will be needed in jobcentres to conduct the interviews with single parents announced by the Prime Minister on 2 June; what the gross costs of the exercise will be; and how many single parents are expected to find jobs as a result of it. [2673]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Employment Service help is already available to those lone parents who choose to use it. We will consider what additional support should in time be made available to improve the help to lone parents seeking jobs.

National Curriculum

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to reduce the compulsory elements of the national curriculum in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools; and if he will make a statement. [3029]

Ms Estelle Morris: My right hon. Friend does not plan to make any statutory changes to key stages 1, 2 and 3 of the national curriculum before the year 2000 and is keeping the situation at key stage 4 under review.

Job Clubs

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to restore reductions in hours of operation of job clubs imposed during the current year, with particular reference the reduction applied to Frome job club. [2241]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. David Heath, dated 10 June 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning the reduction in hours of Jobclubs, with particular reference to Frome Jobclub. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

It may help if I explain that we have needed to reduce our overall provision of Jobclubs as a result of the fall in unemployment over the past year and a consequent reduction in funding. In the South West we reduced our Jobclub network at the end of the 1996/97 operational year by 14 from 121 to 107, and a further 4 reduced their hours of operation.

A number of factors led to the decision to reduce the hours at Frome Jobclub. During the 1996/7 operational year, because of falling unemployment registers, it became clear that there were no longer sufficient numbers of unemployed people to support a Jobclub presence in Frome for four mornings a week. Between April 1996 and April 1997 registered unemployment at Frome Jobcentre fell by 30% from 1,081 to 757 with a consequential impact on our ability to fill all the places at the Jobclub.

I hope this helps to explain the background to our decision. While we have no plans at present to restore Frome JobClub's previous hours of operation, we will review the position very carefully if circumstances were to change.

I hope this is helpful.

Travellers (Education)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his time scale for producing the planned video on education for travellers. [2760]

Ms Estelle Morris: This is one of a number of matters that are currently under consideration and I will write to the hon. Member as soon as a decision is reached.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the number of travellers' children currently of school age but not attending any school. [2761]

Ms Morris: Accurate data on Traveller children are difficult to collect. Through the work of the Traveller Education Services funded under section 488 of the Education Act 1996, significant progress has been made in improving school registration of traveller children. At primary level, in particular, about 80 per cent. of the total number are now registered at school, although an estimated 3–4,000 children are not. The picture at secondary level, while also improving, remains a matter of particular concern: an estimated 10,000 children are not registered at school.

School-age Children

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children who are currently of school age are not attending any school. [2762]

Ms Estelle Morris: As of January 1996, local education authorities in England were arranging education otherwise than at school for 19,133 children of compulsory school age. Included in this total were 1,011 non-statemented children in hospital and 11,055 children attending Pupil Referral Units. Data for January 1997 are not yet available. The Department does not collect information on the number of children whose parents arrange education outside of the school system, as is permitted in law: but it has been estimated that some 10,000 children are educated in this manner.

I am replying separately on the question of Traveller children not attending school.

Non-teaching Head Teachers

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if non-teaching head teachers are included when calculating (a) class sizes and (b) pupil-teacher ratios. [2764]

Mr. Byers: Non-teaching head teachers are included when calculating pupil–teacher ratios but not class sizes.

Ethnic Minorities (Education)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to take forward the 10 point plan on education for the ethnic minorities. [2759]

Ms Estelle Morris: We are currently considering ways of raising the achievement of ethnic minority pupils, and among these the future of the previous Government's 10 point action plan. We hope to make an announcement shortly.

Pupil-teacher Ratio

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has for changes to the way in which pupil-teacher ratio and class sizes are calculated. [2763]

Mr. Byers: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for South-East Cambridgeshire (Mr. Paice) on 5 June, Official Report, column 244.

Disabled People (Civil Rights)

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he plans to take to implement full, enforceable civil rights for disabled people. [2502]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Our manifesto commits us to establishing "comprehensive, enforceable civil rights" for disabled people. We are consulting interested parties on the best way to achieve this and we shall develop proposals in the light of our discussions.

Further Education

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if the revised figures for the number of students in the further education sector as a result of the recent agreement between his Department and the Further Education Funding Council will be the baseline for the next PES round. [2871]

Dr. Howells: The student numbers implied by the Further Education Funding Council for England's allocations to colleges for the academic year 1997–98 will be taken into account in future decisions about public expenditure.

Political and Special Advisers

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list (a) the name, (b) the salary, (c) the previous occupation and salary and (d) the terms and conditions of each political and special adviser in his Department; and what was the selection process used to appoint these persons. [2420]

Mr. Blunkett [holding answer 6 June 1997]: I have, with the approval of the Prime Minister, appointed two Special Advisers; Conor Ryan and Sophie Linden, who works part-time.

I have, in addition, appointed Professor Michael Barber as an expert adviser on Standards and Effectiveness.

The terms and conditions of these appointments are set out in the draft model contract, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Special Advisers are paid within a range of £24,349 to £73,484. Their salaries are negotiated individually and are confidential within this range. Details of this and of previous salary are not provided in order to protect the privacy of the individuals concerned. I have already announced that I will provide information on the total costs to the Department of a number of appointments as soon as agreement has been reached.

These are personal appointments by myself, following consultation with the Permanent Head of the Department and the Prime Minister.

DEFENCE

Chemical and Biological Weapons

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what share of the costs of the CBDE Porton Down are devoted to research and programmes related to the detection of contraventions of chemical and biological weapons treaties and conventions, and the creation of verification systems; which agencies and departments have commissioned such research and programmes; and what plans he has to review this matter. [1338]

Mr. Spellar: Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) operates as a Trading Fund and all work carried out by the CBD Sector at Porton Down is commissioned and paid for by customers. Income for the 1996–97 financial year relating to the detection of contraventions of chemical and biological weapons treaties and conventions, and the creation of a verification system was:

Customer	Amount £000	Percentage of total income 1996–97
MOD	1,982	4.5
FCO	100	0.3
DTI	150	0.3
OPCW[1] Inspector Training
FCO	17	0.04
Other Governments	43.5	0.1
	2,292.5	5.24

[1] Organisation for the Production of Chemical Weapons.

MOD provides advice and research and development work on a range of Chemical and Biological arms control and export control matters. Other Government departments provide support to UN Special Commission, tutors for an OPCW inspectors training course and technical support to the DTI which is the UK National Authority for Implementation of the Chemical Weapons Convention.

Plans for expenditure in this area are regularly reviewed by Departments during their annual costing cycles. The MOD's expenditure will also be reviewed as part of the Strategic Defence Review announced by the Secretary of State for Defence on 28 May.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps have been taken to decontaminate each of the sites (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) abroad where the British Armed Forces have (i) tested and (ii) stored chemical weapons or chemical agents used in chemical weapons; when he expects this work to be completed; and what estimate he has made of the cost to date of those measures. [2438]

Mr. Spellar: Within the United Kingdom, former chemical warfare (CW) sites were decontaminated in accordance with the guidance prevalent at the time my Department vacated the site. Those sites which continue to form part of the Defence Estate are being assessed as part of the Department's Land Quality Assessment programme. This programme is designed to establish the condition of individual sites on the Defence Estate and, where appropriate, make recommendations for remediation. Given the extent of the Defence Estate I am not able to estimate when this work will be completed. As to the costs involved, no central records are maintained. Indeed, as remediation work on former CW sites has been spread over some 50 years it is not possible to quantify the costs involved.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the sites abroad where the United Kingdom has conducted trials or tests of chemical weapons or their components in the last 30 years, indicating the types and quantities of chemical agents used in each case. [2437]

Dr. John Reid: The United Kingdom relinquished its offensive chemical weapons programme in the late 1950s. Since then, no trials of chemical weapons or their components have been carried out, either in the UK or overseas.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research has been commissioned, what estimates have been made by his Department and what information presented to him, regarding the costs per annum to the total defence budget of the introduction of (a) £3.50 an hour, (b) £4 an hour and (c) £4.40 an hour; and if he will make a statement. [2105]

Dr. John Reid: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade (Mrs. Beckett) on 9 June (Official Report, Col. 310).

British Army of the Rhine

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of the defence budget was spent on updating the equipment of the British Army of the Rhine over the last three years. [2392]

Mr. Spellar: Information about expenditure on defence equipment is collated on the basis of generic categories rather than the user Service or formation. Expenditure on the development and production of Land systems has represented 6 per cent. of the Defence budget in each of the last three years.

Note:

1. This figure includes expenditure on Land systems for the Royal Navy and Royal Air Force, and excludes expenditure on Sea and Air systems for the Army.

2. The figure is based on cash outturn costs; for 1995–96 and 1996–97 these are estimates.

3. The British Army of the Rhine ceased to exist as a formation from 1 April 1994 when 1 (UK) Armoured Division and the United Kingdom Support Command (Germany) became fully operational under Headquarters Land Command.

Defence Expenditure

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) percentage of public expenditure and (b) proportion of Gross National Product each member country of NATO spent on defence in the last five years. [2391]

Dr. John Reid: My Department does not routinely collect information on defence expenditure by our NATO allies as a proportion of total public expenditure.

The percentage of Gross Domestic Product spent on defence by each NATO member in each of the last five years is given below.

Per cent.

Country	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996
Greece	5.5	5.4	5.6	4.6	4.6

Iceland, although a member of NATO, has no armed forces.

RAF Wroughton

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidelines have been laid down for the present and future usage of the RAF Wroughton site, including the former Princess Alexandra Hospital; and what is the total income that has been generated by leasing out the site and its facilities since the closure of the hospital; and from whom. [2306]

Mr. Spellar: Fifty-six airmen's quarters at RAF Wroughton have been leased for a period of three years to three housing associations, pending their re-use by the armed forces. I am withholding information on the level of rent being paid for reasons of commercial confidentiality under exemption 7 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. No other facilities have been leased out since the site closed. The former Princess Alexander Hospital is in disposal, and guidelines for its future use are therefore a matter for the local planning authority. In the meantime, all relevant health and safety guidelines are being followed.

Plastic Baton Rounds

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about plastic baton rounds. [3191]

Mr. Spellar: I understand that tests have shown that a significant proportion of a batch of plastic baton rounds, approved for use in public order situations by the Armed Forces, by police forces in England and Wales and by the Royal Ulster Constabulary, have muzzle velocities slightly in excess of the upper limit in the equipment specification. These rounds, which were on issue from early 1994, were withdrawn from all operational use in April this year. Replacement stocks, which do not exceed the specified velocity, have been issued.

Plastic baton rounds and the procedures governing their use will be kept under continuous review. In addition, procedures are being put in place to ensure that stocks in operational use are tested regularly to ensure that they continue to conform to specification. A programme has been put in hand to take advantage of emerging technologies, with the aim of developing improved baton round equipment to meet operational needs but with reduced injury potential. We will continue to look at other effective means for controlling public disorder and riot situations.

Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the United Kingdom's contribution to the costs of the preparatory commission for the international organization established under the Comprehensive Test Ban treaty, expressing the figures (a) for each relevant

Government financial year and (b) for each financial year of the commission; and from which subheads of which votes these funds are taken. [2551]

Dr. John Reid: The Government is fully committed to the strong verification regime of monitoring and on-site inspection which is so essential to the successful implementation of the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty. The Budget of the Preparatory Commission of the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty Organisation is determined annually. That for 1997 was finalised last March and amounted to some $US28, of which the United Kingdom contribution, based upon the United Nations scale of charges, is 6 per cent. So far the United kingdom has paid some $US213,00, and the balance will be paid later this year.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Developing Countries (Debts)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what criteria will be used to determine which developing countries are given priority in respect of reducing their debts to the United Kingdom. [2669]

Clare Short: We will give priority to those countries which are eligible for concessional Paris Club relief. These are low income countries whose debt burden is unsustainable, and which are undertaking economic reform programmes agreed with the IMF. Our aim is that debt relief should be part of a wider commitment by debtors to economic reform, to ensure that the relief encourages economic development and leads to lasting poverty reduction.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how she intends to reduce the debt owed to Britain from developing countries in the next year. [2666]

Clare Short: The United Kingdom will play a full part in rescheduling negotiations at the Paris Club of Official Creditors, and will push for swift and comprehensive implementation of the recently agreed Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is the estimated debt to Britain from developing countries. [2665]

Clare Short: In November 1996 (the latest date for which figures are currently available) the total outstanding rescheduled debt owed to the Export Credits Guarantee Department by countries defined by the World Bank as developing countries (lower and middle income countries) and which have had a Paris Club debt rescheduling was £7,434.58 million.

At the end of March 1997 the total value of development loans owed to the Overseas Development Administration was £239 million.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has and over what time scale to cancel the debt owed to Britain by developing countries. [2667]

Clare Short: The United Kingdom has already forgiven aid loans worth £1.2 billion. We are willing to consider similar relief on aid debts for the remaining low income debtors which cannot service their debt and have demonstrated their ability to use debt relief to promote economic development and reduce poverty.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what research her Department has evaluated on measures taken or evaluated by other countries to reduce the debts owed by developing countries. [2668]

Clare Short: We have studied with interest assessments from a number of sources, including non-governmental organisations, the OECD's Development Assistance Committee, the international financial institutions and the Commonwealth Secretariat.

Costa Rica

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is the total sum now owed by the Government of Costa Rica to Her Majesty's Government under the terms of the loan agreement dated 15 February 1973, as amended; how much of this is (a) principal and (b) interest; and what future interest charges are expected. [2548]

Clare Short: Under the present schedule of repayments the total sum due to be repaid by the Government of Costa Rica to Her Majesty's Government under the terms of the loan agreement dated 15 February 1973, as amended is £1,237,845.85; of this £1,121,191.31 is principal and £116,654.54 is interest. Future interest charges are at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what was the total sum lent to the Government of Costa Rica by Her Majesty's Government under the terms of the loan agreement dated 15 February 1973, as amended. [2546]

Clare Short: The sum lent to the Government of Costa Rica by Her Majesty's Government under the terms of the loan agreement dated 15 February 1973, as amended is £3,880,441.25. Since that date repayments under this loan have been rescheduled on nine occasions and arrears of interest have been consolidated into the original loan.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what further discussions there have been between the Government of Costa Rica and Her Majesty's Government with regard to the loan agreement dated 15 February 1973, as amended, since the debt rescheduling agreement of 18 November 1993. [2542]

Clare Short: There have been no discussions of the agreement since the 18 November 1993 rescheduling. We have drawn the attention of the Costa Rican authorities to arrears whenever they have arisen, which has resulted in their being cleared.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is the total sum paid by the Government of Costa Rica to Her Majesty's Government under the terms of the loan agreement dated 15 February 1973, as amended; and how much of this is (a) principal and (b) interest. [2547]

Clare Short: The total sum paid to date by the Government of Costa Rica to Her Majesty's Government under the terms of the loan agreement dated 15 February 1973, as amended £7,105,106.87; of this £4,828,039.28 is principal and £2,277,067.59 is interest.

Jammu and Kashmir

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the current provision of aid to Jammu and Kashmir. [2730]

Clare Short: DFID contributed £17 million from Aid and Trade Provision funds to a 480MW hydroelectric power station at Uri, which has just been completed. Since 1995 DFID has also contributed £450,000 in support of the International Committee of the Red Cross programme in Jammu and Kashmir, including a new contribution of £150,000 in March 1997.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the current provision of aid to Sierra Leone. [2729]

Clare Short: Following the military coup on 25 May, we have suspended our bilateral aid programme pending developments.

DFID had been working closely with the democratically elected government to rebuild the country and reduce poverty.

UN Poverty Conference

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress has been made in implementing the conclusions of the UN Copenhagen Conference on International Poverty; and if she will make a statement. [1193]

Clare Short: This Government is committed to working for a safer, more decent and environmentally stable world. The elimination of poverty is at the centre of our agenda. I am currently reviewing all our programmes to ensure that resources are targeted accordingly. A White Paper will be issued in the Autumn setting out how, through more coherent policies, the Government will tackle global poverty and promote sustainable development. This strategy will embrace the commitments agreed at the Copenhagen Summit.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proportion of national lottery proceeds have been directed to the Northern region. [2147]

Mr. Banks: Regions in the North of England have received £754,542,879 from the Lottery representing a share of 21 per cent. of all Lottery money distributed to date. The details are set out in the following table.

Region	Total £	Total per cent.[1]
North West	326,412,694	9
North East	143,883,667	4
Yorkshire and Humberside	210,442,746	6
Merseyside	73,803,772	2
Total	754,542,879	21

[1] Rounded to the nearest per cent.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Defendants (Prosecution Costs)

Mr. Malins: To ask the Attorney-General what was the total sum ordered to be paid by defendants in criminal cases in relation to the prosecution cost; and what was the total sum recovered in each of the last three years. [2955]

The Attorney-General: Information on the amounts ordered to be paid by defendants in relation to prosecution costs is not available centrally within the Crown Prosecution Service and could be collected only at disproportionate cost. The sums recovered from defendants in the last three years in relation to the CPS are as follows:

	Amount recovered £ million
1994–95	19.3
1995–96	20.5
1996–97	21.4

The number of cases handled by the Serious Fraud Office is sufficiently small for such awards to be centrally available. Orders for the payment of prosecution costs are passed to the appropriate magistrates court which is responsible for enforcing the order and collecting payments. The amounts awarded and recovered in the last three financial years in relation to awards in favour of the SFO are:

	Awarded £	Recovered £
1994–95	60,000	154,621.50
1995–96	191,667	24,756.00
1996–97	6,000	[1]172,554.66

[1] Unaudited figure. Please note that recovery of amounts of costs awarded do not always fall in the same financial year.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates and Justices of the Peace

Mr. Malins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what studies he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated to indicate the relative case disposal rate of stipendiary magistrates and justices of the peace. [2947]

Mr. Hoon: In 1994, the Lord Chancellor established a working party to identify more clearly the respective roles of the stipendiary magistracy and the lay bench in the administration of justice in the magistrates' courts. The working party commissioned research from the University of Leeds on the role and appointment of stipendiary magistrates. A copy of the working party's report (published in February 1996) is available in both libraries.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many appeals against (i) conviction and (ii) sentence were successfully made from decisions of justices of the peace; and how many appeals against (1) convictions and (2) sentence were successfully made from decisions of stipendiary and metropolitan stipendiary magistrates in each of the last three years. [2938]

Mr. Hoon: The question concerns a matter which has been assigned to the Court Service under the terms of its framework document. I have therefore asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Humfrey Malins, dated 9 June 1997:

The Parliamentary Secretary of the Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to your Question about how many appeals against convictions and sentence were successfully made from decisions of justices of the peace, stipendiary and metropolitan stipendiary magistrates in each of the last three years.

The information requested is not held centrally and can only be provided at disproportionate cost. However, I set out below information on the total number of appeals made from magistrates' courts which may be of interest to you.

Appeals	Allowed	Dismissed	Varied [1]	Remitted to mag crt [2]	Abandoned in court [3]	Abandoned before court [4]	Other result	Total
1996–97	4,312	6,198	3,259	39	1,057	3,002	166	18,033
1995–96	7,839	8,181	4,283	44	1,182	3,901	312	25,742
1994–95	8,116	7,957	4,003	42	1,132	3,901	369	25,520

[1] Appeals where sentence has been reduced.
[2] Appeals sent back to magistrates' court for consideration.
[3] Appeals which have been abandoned at a hearing.
[4] Appeals which have been abandoned before a hearing.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to increase (a) the number of metropolitan stipendiary magistrates and (b) the number of stipendiary magistrates. [2949]

Mr. Hoon: Stipendiary magistrates are appointed by the Lord Chancellor at the request of the relevant Lord Chancellor's Advisory Committee in order to assist the efficient disposal of cases in magistrates' courts. Under the Justices of the Peace Act 1997 the statutory ceilings on the number of stipendiary appointments are: 60 metropolitan stipendiary magistrates; and 50 provincial stipendiary magistrates. There are no current plans to raise either ceiling. Appointments to two recently established provincial stipendiary magistrate posts in Derbyshire will be announced shortly.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many justices of the peace there are in England and Wales. [2951]

Mr. Hoon: As at 1 January 1997 there were 30,374 active justices of the peace in England and Wales, 15,858 men and 14,516 women.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many cases were disposed of by justices of the peace in 1996. [2953]

Mr. Hoon: Magistrates throughout England and Wales dealt with 2,321,475 defendants in completed criminal cases and 531,181 applications in completed family and civil cases during 1996. The Lord Chancellor's Department does not collect a breakdown of which cases were heard by justices of the peace or by stipendiary magistrates.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to change the (a) title and (b) working conditions of stipendiary magistrates. [2954]

Mr. Hoon: A consultation paper on the titles of stipendiary magistrates was issued in 1992. The responses revealed there to be insufficient consensus on which alternative title might be adopted for stipendiary magistrates. There are no plans to change working conditions of stipendiary magistrates.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to give (a) stipendiary and (b) metropolitan stipendiary magistrates sentencing or other powers greater than those exercised by justices of the peace. [2940]

Mr. Hoon: There are currently no plans to alter sentencing or other powers of stipendiary or metropolitan stipendiary magistrates. However, this Government's commitment to a review of Youth Justice might identify the need to consider this issue further.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what has been the average cost to the Exchequer of (a) a stipendiary magistrate and (b) a justice of the peace, in each of the last three years. [2948]

Mr. Hoon: The average cost to the Consolidated Fund of a stipendiary magistrate for the last three years was:

1994–95: £60,939
1995–96: £67,340
1996–97: £70,072

The average cost of financial loss, travelling and subsistence allowances and training of a justice of the peace for the three most recent financial years for which such information is available was:

1993–94: £418
1994–95: £471
1995–96: £452

Expenditure figures for 1996–97 are not yet available.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many metropolitan stipendiary magistrates and stipendiary magistrates there are in England and Wales. [2950]

Mr. Hoon: There are 50 metropolitan stipendiary magistrates and 40 provincial stipendiary magistrates in post.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many cases were disposed of by metropolitan stipendiary magistrates and stipendiary magistrates in 1996. [2952]

Mr. Hoon: Magistrates throughout England and Wales dealt with 2,321,475 defendants in completed criminal cases and 531,181 applications in completed family and civil cases during 1996. The Lord Chancellor's Department does not collect a breakdown of which cases were heard by justices of the peace or by stipendiary magistrates.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the total sum ordered to be paid by legally aided defendants in all criminal proceedings by way of contribution to legal aid; and what was the total sum so paid in each of the last three years. [2956]

Mr. Hoon: Information on the amount of contribution ordered to be paid by legally aided defendants in criminal proceedings is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The total amount of contributions received, net of any repayments to defendants, in each of the last three years for which information is available, was as follows:

£ million

	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96
Criminal magistrates' court	2.3	2.7	2.7
Higher criminal courts	1.6	1.6	1.6
Total contributions received	3.9	4.3	4.3

Following an acquittal an assisted person may be reimbursed the full cost of contributions that have been paid. However, information on the amount of contributions repaid is not available.

SCOTLAND

Maternity Unit (Glasgow)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans there are for financing the proposed new maternity unit at Glasgow Royal Infirmary which will serve the Shettleston constituency; and if he will make a statement. [2215]

Mr. Galbraith: The proposed new maternity unit at Glasgow Royal Infirmary is part of a package of private finance initiative projects which I am reviewing at present.

Scottish Screen

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which body will be charged with responsibility for the cultural and educational aspects of film and video. [2285]

Mr. Galbraith: Scottish Screen took over the responsibilities of the Scottish Film Council on 1 April 1997.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what local authority representation there is on the current Scottish Screen Board. [2196]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 6 June 1997]: At present there is no local authority representation on the board of Scottish Screen. This is an omission which I look forward to rectifying at the earliest opportunity.

Ms Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current staffing of Scottish Screen; and if he will list the job titles of those staff. [2198]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 6 June 1997]: Thirty six people are employed. Under the Chief Executive there are eight departments: Production; Development; Archive; Locations; Marketing, Information & Business Development; Europe (Media Antenna): Training; and Central Services.
The job titles are:

Chief Executive's Office: Chief Executive, Personal Assistant;

Production: Production Business Executive, Projects Producer, Production Assistant, Information Officer;

Development: Development Producer, Development Assistant;

Archive: Development Producer, Development Assistant;

Archive; Archive Curator, Production Library Administrator, Librarian, Assistant Librarian (Cataloguing), Gaelic Television Officer, Preservation and Technical Executive Officer, Access Technician;

Locations: Locations Director, Locations Co-ordinator, Locations Assistant;

Marketing, Information, Business & Development: Exhibition Officer, Marketing Officer, Marketing Assistant, Information Officer;

MEDIA Antenna (Europe): MEDIA Antenna Officer, MEDIA Antenna Assistant;

Training: Training Director, Projects Producer, Training Co-ordinator, Projects Producer, Clerical Assistant;

Central Services: Accountant, Accounting Assistant, Accounting Clerk, Office Manager, Office Assistant, Senior Development Officer, Administration Officer.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his plans for compulsory competitive tendering. [2286]

Mr. Chisholm: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall) on 2 June, Official Report, columns 67–68.

HIV/AIDS

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans he has to provide additional resources for HIV/AIDS therapy in Scotland in light of the increased availability of more effective HIV/AIDS drug treatments; and if he will make a statement; [2433]

(2) what steps he will take to ensure that there is sufficient funding for HIV/AIDS clinics in Scotland to meet the anticipated increased demand for their services; and if he will make a statement; [2434]

(3) what steps he will take to ensure full availability of combination therapies, counselling services, dietetic treatments, in-patient services, psychiatric support in the community and district nurse services and other necessary services for HIV/AIDS patients; and if he will make a statement. [2435]

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide additional funds for the provision of the new combination therapies for HIV/AIDS patients. [2289]

Mr. Galbraith: It is for health boards to consider the treatment and care to be provided to HIV/AIDS patients in their areas in the light of local needs and of the total resources available to them. The implications of the new combination therapies will be among the factors they consider.

In the current year, health boards in Scotland have been given, within their general allocations, funds totalling £9.6 million to respond to the treatment and care needs of persons with HIV/AIDS. In addition, boards are receiving some £6.4 million to engage in prevention activities.

Scottish Homes

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will remove the capital restrictions imposed on the current year's Scottish Homes budget. [2473]

Mr. Chisholm: The Government is committed to working within current expenditure plans. Under these, Scottish Homes is required to use its capital receipts to repay debt. To remove this requirement would mean having to find offsetting savings from other Scottish Office programmes. We are, of course, continuing to review spending priorities generally across the Scottish Office.

Manning Appeals

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to synchronise the rights of objectors to appeal with the existing rights available to developers. [1970]

Mr. Chisholm [holding answer 9 June 1997]: The Scottish Office has no plans to extend to objectors the existing rights of applicants to appeal against the refusal of planning permission. Objectors already have a voice and can make representations to the planning authority before a planning application is decided. In particular, they have the opportunity to submit views to their community councils (which are now statutory consultees for all planning applications) and the Council. Councils are required to take these views fully into account when deciding applications.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Special Advisers

Ms McDonagh: To ask the President of the Council, pursuant to her oral answer to the right hon. Members for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) and for East Devon (Sir P. Emery) of 5 June, Official Report, columns 549–50, if she will make a further statement on the arrangements for the positive vetting of special advisers. [3053]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: Special advisers are vetted as appropriate to the sensitivity of material they see. In the Prime Minister's Office, Mr. Jonathan Powell may from time to time need to have access to sensitive intelligence material. He has previously been positively vetted and his vetting is now being renewed. Some other special advisers in No. 10 are, as a matter of routine, being positively vetted though it is unlikely that they will have access to sensitive intelligence material.

European Affairs Committees

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the President of the Council when she expects to move to re-establish the Select Committee on European Legislation and European Standing Committees A and B; and if she will make a statement on her proposals for their responsibilities in the forthcoming parliamentary session. [2567]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: I hope that the Committees will be re-established soon. They will continue to operate under their current Standing Orders pending the House's approval of any recommendations for change following the review of the process for scrutinising European legislation, which the Government is committed to undertaking.

Constitutional Bills

Mr. Howard: To ask the President of the Council on which previous occasion or occasions a Bill of constitutional significance has been made subject to a timetable motion before the commencement of the Committee stage. [2153]

Mrs. Ann Taylor [pursuant to her answer, 9 June 1997, c. 318]: The Scotland Bill and the Wales Bill were the subject of Allocation of Time Orders made on 16 November 1977, having been given a Second Reading on 14 and 15 November respectively.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Minimum Wage

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research has been commissioned and what estimates have been made by his Department and what information presented to him, regarding the costs per annum to the total Home Department budget of the introduction of a minimum wage at (a) £3.50 an hour, (b) 4 an hour and (c) £4.40 an hour; and if he will make a statement. [2110]

Mr. Straw: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 9 June, Official Report, column 310.

London Fire and Civil Defence Authority

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to assist the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority with the growth in its pension liabilities; and if he will make a statement. [2366]

Mr. George Howarth: Fire authorities generally are faced with the cost of meeting increasing pensions commitments from their revenue budgets. The Government will take this into account in reaching its decisions on future local government settlements. My right hon. Friend will also be giving early consideration to taking forward the review that has been undertaken of the fireman's pension scheme.

Animal Experimentation

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what research he has commissioned into the overbreeding of small animals in London medical schools; and if he will make a statement; [2386]

(2) what assessment he has made of the findings of the report, "Access Denied", by the national Anti-Vivisection Society, a copy of which has been sent to him. [2388]

Mr. George Howarth: The allegations made by the National Anti-Vivisection Society in their report "Access Denied", including those of overbreeding of laboratory animals, were investigated by a senior member of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate. A letter outlining the findings of this investigation was sent to the Director of the National Anti-Vivisection Society in July 1996.

The Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 anticipates the overbreeding of animals and specifically provides for their humane killing. Overbreeding is inevitable and arises from difficulty in predicting when and how many animals will be needed in the face of varying demands specifying age, sex, weight and strain, for example.

Mr. Hanclock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to allow public scrutiny of project licence applications for animal experimentation. [2387]

Mr. Howarth: Section 24 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 prohibits the disclosure of such information.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the members of the Animal Procedures Committee; when the terms of office of the members come to an end; and what plans he has to increase public openness of the appointments procedure. [2385]

Mr. Howarth: The members of the Committee are as follows:

	Appointed
Professor Margaret Brazier (Appointed as Chairman in October 1993)	July 1990
Professor Ronald Anderson	December 1994
Professor Margaret Boden	December 1994
Professor Barry Bridges	January 1990
Professor Fiona Broughton Pipkin	January 1990
Dr. David Christopher	December 1994
Dr. Yvonne Cripps	December 1994
Professor Robin Dunbar	January 1997
Professor Paul Flecknell	December 1994
Mr. John Gregory	January 1997
Professor Susan Iversen	January 1990
Mrs. Judy MacArthur Clark	December 1994
Miss Cindy Milburn	April 1995
Dr. Ian Purchase	December 1994
Dr. Jacqueline Southee	April 1995
Professor Michael Spyer	January 1990
Dr. Anthony Suckling	January 1992
Professor John Turner	January 1997
Mr. Les Ward	April 1995

A list of members is published each year in the Committee's annual report.

Members of the Committee are appointed for a term not exceeding four years. No member may be appointed for more than two terms. Appointments are always announced.

Consideration is currently being given to changes in the appointment process in the light of the recommendations made by the Nolan Committee.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what measures will be taken to promote and enforce the principles of reduction, refinement and replacement in respect of animal experiments; [3004]

(2) how the Government intends to promote and facilitate the investigation of viable alternatives to the use of animals in experiments. [3006]

Mr. Howarth: Under the terms of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, no programme of work can be authorised unless consideration has been given to alternatives; these include reduction, refinement and replacement. In assessing project licence applications, the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate ensures that such consideration has been given.

The Government makes funds available to the Animals Procedures Committee to sponsor research into and other work concerned with alternatives.

The Government fully supports the work of the European Centre for the Validation of Alternative Methods.

Dr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Government will be pressing for immediate implementation of the ban on cosmetics testing on animals agreed by the EU Commission in 1993. [2879]

Mr. Howarth: The 6th Council amendment to the European Cosmetics Directive sought in 1993 to ban the marketing of cosmetic products containing ingredients, or combinations of ingredients, tested on animals after January 1998, but only if validated alternative tests, which offer an equivalent level of protection for the consumer, are in place.

Despite intense and continuing research efforts, mainly by the cosmetics industry itself, validated alternatives are not available for all tests and the European Union has had to postpone the deadline until June 2000.

Dr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to make the technical details of applications for licences under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 and information regarding breaches of the regulations of this Act more easily available and accessible to the public. [2881]

Mr. Howarth: Section 24 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 prohibits the disclosure of such information.

General information on infringements of the Act is published each year in the annual report of the Animal Procedures Committee.

Dr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans the Government have to establish a Royal Commission inquiry into animal experiments; and what is the proposed time scale. [3003]

Mr. Howarth: We have no such plans at this time.

CS Gas Spray

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the use of CS gas spray by the police. [2267]

Mr. Michael: The Decision to issue CS spray equipment is for chief constables while the decision to use CS spray, once issued, rests with individual officers, who must comply with the law in relation to the use of any force.

In April 1995, the Association of Chief Police Officers agreed that selected forces should conduct street trials of CS spray. This followed a long period of consideration of possible police use of incapacitant sprays. Expert assessment of all available scientific data concluded that not enough was know about the health effects of pepper spray but that CS, which had been tested to a level similar to that required for a new pharmaceutical drug, did not present any significant threat to health. Trials took place in 16 forces between 1 March and 31 August 1996. Officers felt that the new equipment had brought about a marked reduction in assaults, although assaults data gave a mixed picture on this. The trials confirmed the safety of CS. Seventeen forces, including the Metropolitan Police, currently have CS sprays. Guidance on the use of CS is an operational matter for chief officers. The Association of Chief Police Officers have produced guidelines, copies of which have been in the Library since April 1996.

European Convention on Human Rights

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the advantages and disadvantages of introducing into British law the European convention on human rights. [1197]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The speech of my right hon. Friend on the Debate on the Address on 19 May, Official Report, column 395, set out the case, in the Government's view, for incorporating the Convention. It will be for others to point out what they see as the disadvantages.

I will send the hon. Gentleman a document, "Bringing Rights Home", published by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and my hon. Friend the Member for Brent South (Mr. Boateng) in December, setting out the case in more detail.

Deportation

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many children were served with notices of intention to deport in 1995, 1996 and 1997 to date; [2467]

(2) how many children were deported in 1995, 1996 and 1997 to date. [2466]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The answer to the question is given in the table.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is contained in the table.

WPC Yvonne Fletcher

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will investigate the allegations contained in a television programme in respect of the late Police Constable, Yvonne Fletcher, a copy of which has been sent to him. [2958]

Mr. Straw: Despite extensive police investigation, nobody has been prosecuted for the brutal murder of WPC Fletcher. The case remains open and the Metropolitan Police will consider any new evidence put to them. They are reviewing the contents of the programme.

Shooting Incident (St. James's Square)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information British intelligence services received prior to the shooting in St James's Square on 17 April about the prospect of a shooting in the square. [2957]

Mr. Straw: It is not Government practice to comment on speculation about the activities of the intelligence services.

First-time Offenders

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate how many of those persons convicted of a serious criminal offence in 1996 were first-time offenders. [2941]

Mr. Michael: There is no universal or simple definition of the term "serious offence, but information routinely available centrally for England and Wales relates to convictions for a "standard list" of fence. These offences are listed in appendices 4 and 5 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1995" (Cm. 3421). They include all indictable and some of the more serious summary offences."

The latest figures available on this basis relate to 1994, when it is estimated that, of the 357,000 persons sentenced for standard list offences, 199,000 had no previous convictions for such offences.

Figures for 1995 should be available later this year.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people sought asylum in the United Kingdom; how many were refused; and of those refused, how many were removed from the United Kingdom in each of the last four years. [2943]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Information regarding asylum applications submitted in the United Kingdom, and on initial decisions on applications, for each of the years 1993 to 1996, is given in table 1.1 of the Home Office Statistical Bulletin "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom, 1996", issue 15/97. Information on removals and voluntary departures of asylum applicants during this period is given in table 10.1 of the same publication, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons who sought asylum in the United Kingdom in the last three years but were refused, are still in the United Kingdom; and of such persons how many are at addresses known to his Department; [2942]

(2) what proportion of those persons who sought asylum in the United Kingdom in (a) 1994, (b) 1995 and (c) 1996 and who are still in the United Kingdom are at addresses known to his Department. [2944]

Mr. O'Brien: The requested information is not available.

Illegal Immigrants

He has previously been positively vetted, and his vetting is now being renewed. Pending the completion of that process, the security and intelligence agencies have been consulted about what material he should see and their recommendations are being followed.

Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 22 May 1997, Official Report, column 152, which indicated that there will be greater emphasis in the assessment of proposals for support from Round 4 of the SRB Challenge Fund on tackling the needs of communities in the most deprived areas.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what research has been commissioned and what estimates have been made by his Department, and what information presented to him, regarding the costs per annum to local authorities in England of the introduction of a minimum wage at (a) £3.50 an hour, (b) £4 an hour and (c) £4.40 an hour; and if he will make a statement; [2123]

(2) what research has been commissioned and what estimates have been made by his Department, and what information presented to him, regarding the costs per annum to the Department of the Environment budget of the introduction of a minimum wage at (a) £3.50 an hour, (b) £4 an hour and (c) £4.40 an hour; and if he will make a statement. [2124]

Mr. Raynsford: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on Monday 9 June 1997, Official Report, column 310.

English House Condition Survey

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the energy report relating to the 1996 English House Condition Survey; and if he will make a statement. [2212]

Mr. Raynsford: We expect to publish detailed energy findings from the 1996 English House Condition Survey by Autumn 1998. However, some information on heating facilities and thermal insulation, will be included in the main report of this survey, scheduled for publication before the end of this year.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he proposes following the report of the findings of the energy survey contained within the 1991 English House Condition Survey. [2211]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government is committed to improving the energy efficiency of the housing stock revealed by the 1991 English House Condition Survey. Despite existing provisions to promote energy efficiency and to improve the stock—through the Home Energy Conservation Act, the Home Energy Efficiency Scheme, the work of the Energy Saving Trust and the Department's best practice programme and through private sector renovation grants and the housing renewal programmes of local authorities and housing associations, there is still a substantial backlog of housing in poor condition and with unsatisfactory energy efficiency characteristics. The Government is reviewing policies to achieve more effective action to remedy sub-standard and energy inefficient housing. New Supplementary Credit Approvals issued as a result of the Capital Receipts' initiative will allow local authorities to proceed more quickly with action to tackle these problems to the extent that they fit with local priorities.

VAT on Domestic Fuel

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to ensure that the proposed reduction in the rate of VAT on domestic fuel does not lead to an increase in carbon dioxide emissions. [2082]

Ms Angela Eagle: Protection from the effects of global warming and the development of sustainable environmental policies cannot proceed in isolation from considerations of social equity.

We estimate that the reduction in VAT on domestic fuel to 5 per cent. will result in an annual increase in carbon dioxide emissions of about 0.24 million tonnes of carbon by 2010, (about 0.15 per cent. of current carbon dioxide emissions). We shall take account of this effect in developing the programme to meet our target to reduce total carbon dioxide emissions by 20 per cent. by 2010.

We are developing policy options which will contribute towards our 2010 target and which will include improvements in domestic and industrial energy efficiency, an integrated transport policy to tackle the projected growth in emissions from road transport, and an increase in the amount of electricity generated from renewable sources and combined heat and power schemes.

Care of the Elderly (Essex)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will review the funding allocated to Essex county council in the 1997–98 Revenue Support Grant in respect of care of the elderly. [2077]

Mr. Raynsford: The distribution of Revenue Support Grant for 1997–98 is now a closed matter, having been approved by Parliament in February as part of the Local Government Finance Settlement. Discussions with local government on the distribution of Revenue Support Grant for 1998–99 are currently in progress. The standard spending assessment for elderly residential social services is among the elements which we expect to examine this year.

Challenge Funds

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how he plans to assess the effectiveness of schemes currently supported by the single regeneration budget challenge funds; and if he will make a statement. [2151]

Ms Angela Eagle: The Government has commissioned the Department of Land Economy at the University of Cambridge to carry out a long term evaluation of the Single Regeneration Budget Challenge Fund, which will include an assessment of the effectiveness of schemes supported by the Challenge Fund.

The Department intends to obtain value for money for its expenditure on the Single Regeneration Budgets.

Capital Receipts

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the sums currently held by each local housing authority in respect of capital receipts. [2160]

Mr. Raynsford: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend, the Minister for Local Government and Housing on 4 June 1997, Official Report, column 198.

Out-of-town Development Schemes

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many out-of town development schemes are awaiting decision by him. [2163]

Mr. Raynsford: We have seven cases awaiting decision by my right hon. Friend, following receipt of the Inspector's report.

Planning Applications

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for how long each called-in planning application in England has been awaiting decision. [2451]

Mr. Raynsford: The following table lists by Government Office region those called-in planning applications in England which are currently awaiting determination following receipt of the Inspector's report.

Water Companies

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will take steps to ensure that water companies take responsibility for leaks from domestic supply pipes. [2534]

Ms Angela Eagle: It is our view that leakage rates are still far too high. At the Water Summit on 19 May, my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister announced that the Director General of Water Services would set tough mandatory targets for total leakage, including leakage from consumers pipes. Many water companies already provide a free leakage detection and repair service for supply pipes owned by household customers. My right hon. Friend asked all companies to consider providing this service.

Herbal Medicines

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to meet representatives from the national Institute of Medical Herbalists to discuss the use of rare plants in herbal medicine and commercial cultivation projects; and if he will make a statement. [2702]

Ms Angela Eagle: The United Kingdom is to present a paper on traditional medicines to the Conference of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species (CITES), currently taking place in Harare. The aim of the paper is not to question the importance of traditional medicine as a legitimate form of medicinal treatment, but to encourage the search for ways in which its use can continue without threatening species in the wild with extinction. At present we have no immediate plans to meet the National Institute of Medicinal Herbalists, but have consulted relevant UK organisations, including representatives of the herbal medicine sector. We have also received the support of Japan and the Republic of Korea.

Endangered Species

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans his Department has to encourage the extension of the international controlled trade list of endangered species; and if he will make a statement. [2703]

Ms Angela Eagle: A new EC Regulation implementing the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species within the Community took effect on 1 June. It includes all species listed on CITES together with additional species whose import into the Community will be monitored by Member States.

The next CITIES Conference of the Parties is currently taking place in Harare, and will consider proposals for amending the species lists. The United Kingdom will consider these carefully in co-ordination with other EU Member States.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what compensation was paid to residents of West Cumbria for reasons of blight following upon NIREX's proposals for the disposal of nuclear waste in the area; [2243]

(2) what discussions have taken place between departmental officials and organisations representing persons who live in the community recently identified as the potential site for nuclear waste disposal on the subject of compensation for property blight. [2244]

Mr. Raynsford: Neither UK Nirex Ltd's proposal for a Rock Characterisation Facility near Sellafield, which was rejected by the local planning authority and on appeal by the Secretary of State, nor their consideration of alternatives sites, which they no longer plan to carry forward, gives rise to any entitlement to compensation for planning blight.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what reports on proposals for potential nuclear waste disposal sites have been brought to the attention of Ministers in the last six weeks. [2242]

Ms Angela Eagle: DOE Ministers have received no reports on proposals for potential nuclear waste disposal sites other than in respect of Nirex's investigations of Sellafield and Dounreay.

Red Lion Hotel, Somerton

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received concerning planning applications APP/R3325/E/96/811767, APP/R3325/E/96 812513, APP/R3325/A/95/254103 and APP/R3325/A/96/265998, referring to the Red Lion Hotel, Somerton; and if he will uphold the recommendations of the planning inspector, Mr. S. L. Dickinson, following the inquiry of 29 to 31 May 1996. [2835]

Mr. Raynsford: To date 22 representations have been received. Inspector's recommendations will be taken in to account along with the further representations in reaching a decision on how to proceed with determining the applications.

TRANSPORT

M6 (Noise Reduction)

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to re-surface the M6 motorway between Lancaster university and junction 34 with noise-reducing material. [2834]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Laurie Haynes to Mr. Hilton Dawson, dated 10 June 1997:

The Minister for Transport in London has asked me to reply to your recent question about the plans to resurface the M6 motorway between Lancaster University and Junction 34 and the use of noise reducing material.

Where a road needs resurfacing we consider using materials which have beneficial noise properties where it is cost effective and affordable. Account also needs to be taken of the effects on safety, the life expectancy of the surfacing to be used and the condition of the existing road base.

Proposals for resurfacing this section of the M6 are being developed and options for noise reducing surfaces will be given full consideration as part of the preparation for the works. Their timing will depend on the availability of resourc

Plutonium Waste

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from European Governments about proposals by British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. to enter national airspace with planes carrying plutonium waste. [2156]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This Department has not received any representations from European governments in connection with any plans by UK airlines to carry plutonium waste on behalf of British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. through their airspace. Neither, I understand, has the Foreign and Commonwealth Office or the Department of Environment.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he plans to approve proposals by British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. to fly plutonium waste from the United Kingdom to Europe. [2157]

Ms Jackson: There are no plans for plutonium waste to be transported by air to, or from, the United Kingdom.

Since 1973 Mixed Oxide (MoX) fuel has been transported from BNFL by air. Currently there are about six flights a year to European destinations. MoX comprises oxides of uranium with a small proportion of plutonium and is carried in ceramic form in packages meeting International Atomic Energy Agency standards. In the unlikely event of an aircraft accident MoX poses no significant risk to public health.

Road Safety

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many road (a) injuries and (b) fatalities occur each year from the loss of wheels from heavy goods and passenger vehicles; and what research his Department intends to undertake into this issue. [2652]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Data on the specific causes of accidents are not routinely collected, and therefore figures on the number of fatalities and injuries arising from accidents due to wheel loss are not available.

Following joint discussions with the Vehicle Inspectorate and the Association of Chief Police Officers, a nation-wide survey looking at the extent of the problem of wheel detachment from heavy goods vehicles and passenger vehicles was started in February this year. The survey has recently finished and the results are being analysed. The need for further action will be considered in light of the survey's findings.

The Department is also about to launch an updated leaflet providing guidance on correct maintenance procedures to help reduce incidents of wheel detachment.

Car Clocking

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has for measures to reduce the incidence of car clocking. [2648]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government deplores the "clocking" of motor vehicles. In 1992, a voluntary mileage recording system, administered by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, was introduced to assist private sector organisations with the compilation of mileage registers which might eventually be made available to the public. Since then, over 10 million mileage figures have been captured.

The question of making the provision of mileages a mandatory requirement of the registration system is currently under review.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimates his Department has made of (a) the cost to consumers of car clocking and (b) the number of incidents occurring each year. [2649]

Ms Jackson: The Institute of Trading Standards Administration (ITSA) has calculated that each year profits of around £100 million are made through the clocking of vehicles. This is calculated on the basis that the value of a care increases by an average of £30 for every 1,000 miles taken off the clock.

There are no reliable estimates of the number of cars clocked in the UK each year.

Delegated Driving Examiners

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many checks have been undertaken by his Department on delegated driving examiners; and which organisations have been allocated delegated examiners. [2644]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Delegated driving test examiners have been authorised for the Ministry of Defence (MOD), 26 Police Forces and 53 Fire Brigades, the Royal Mail, Birmingham City Council and 50 bus company groups.

Delegated examiners are normally trained by the Driving Standards Agency, the part of the Department responsible for conducting driving tests generally. The Agency aims to carry out standards supervision visits to the bus companies on a quarterly basis, and has close technical co-operation with the Ministry of Defence on test standards matters. The Agency is currently initiating discussions with the relevant police and fire authorities about test standards issues.

A40

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the objections received to the orders for the de-trunking of the A40 through Cheltenham. [2538]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There are 32 outstanding letters of objection to the draft order to de-trunk the A40 through Cheltenham and to trunk the A436 from the A40 at Shipton Solers to the A417 at Air Ballon roundabout. All object to the trunking of the A436. The objections mainly concern: the unsuitability of the A436 to take extra traffic; the need for improvements to be carried out to the A436; the effects of more traffic using the unimproved A417 at Crickley Hill and congestion at Air Balloon roundabout.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will announce whether there will be a public inquiry into the de-trunking of the A40 through Cheltenham. [2539]

Ms Jackson: The Department is at present considering objections received following the publication of a draft order to de-trunk the A40 through Cheltenham and to trunk the A436 from the A40 at Shipton Solers to the A417 at Air Balloon roundabout. Until this process is complete I cannot predict whether a public inquiry will be necessary. An announcement will be made as soon as possible.

Tachographs

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many silent checks aimed at detecting drivers interfering with tachograph records there were in each of the last 12 months; [2655]

(2) what percentage of heavy goods vehicle spot-checks were undertaken (a) between the hours of 1900 and 0600 on weekdays and (b) at weekends in each of the last two years. [2656]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Vehicle Inspectorate to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 10 June 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about the number of silent checks aimed at detecting drivers interfering with tachograph records for each of the last 12 months; and the percentage of HGV spot-checks undertaken (a) between the hours of 1900 and 0600 on weekdays and (b) at weekends for each of the last two years.

Details of the number of vehicles silent checked with the aim of detecting tachograph interference are as follows:

Month	HGV	PSV	Total
1996
May	447	149	596
June	632	698	1,330
July	576	866	1,442
August	756	354	1,110
September	305	122	427
October	606	50	656
November	317	96	413
December	469	307	776
1997
January	236	43	279
February	290	33	323
March	282	276	558
April	270	27	297

Data on the percentage of HGV spot checks undertaken (a) between 1900 and 0600 on weekdays and (b) at weekends is not available separately. The total percentage of out-of-hours spot checks carried out between 1900 and 0600 and at weekends (against an agreed 5% minimum target) for each of the last two financial years is:

1995–96: 7.49

1996–97: 8.25

Channel Tunnel

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library copies of the correspondence between Eurotunnel and the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority regarding the decision to re-open the channel tunnel. [2651]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I am not in a position to do so. This would be a breach of Clause 33 of the Concession Agreement of 1986, covering intellectual property and confidentiality, which includes a requirement on all parties to that Agreement, and also the Intergovernmental Commission and Safety Authority, to hold in confidence all documents supplied to them by, or on behalf of, any other party.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if tests will be carried out by Eurotunnel on all rolling stock operated through the channel tunnel to ensure that smoke will not penetrate during a fire or similar incident. [2658]

Ms Jackson: The Concession Agreement requires that all safety arrangements will apply to any trains using the tunnel. The authorisation given by the Intergovernmental Commission bringing the tunnel into service states that Eurotunnel are responsible for ensuring that all trains using its infrastructure meet the required safety standards, including the efficacy of smoke dampers.

The Safety Authority monitors maintenance of all rolling stock through direct examination by its inspectors and working groups and through monitoring audits carried out by Eurotunnel's Health Safety and Quality Directorate.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how the channel tunnel safety authority will ensure that the maintenance procedures for the ventilation dampers in Le Shuttle wagons are regularly reviewed. [2659]

Ms Jackson: The Channel Tunnel Safety Authority is required under the Treaty of Canterbury to advise and assist the Intergovernmental Commission of all matters concerning safety in the construction and operation of the Fixed Link.

The Safety Authority monitors all aspects of Eurotunnel's operations to ensure that safety standards are met. This is achieved through examianton of detailed incident reports and regular operational reports from Eurotunnel and by the actions of Safety Authority appointed inspectors and specialist working groups.

Safety Authority inspectors recently witnessed smoke penetration tests carried out by Eurotunnel to verify the smoke tightness of amenity coaches used in the HGV shuttle service.

Rail Driver Fatigue

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what procedures his Department has in place to ensure that the research undertaken by British Rail on the effects of driver fatigue will be disseminated to all rail operating companies. [2657]

Ms Glenda Jackson: British Rail's report into this research was disseminated to the Train Operating Companies (TOCs) within its ownership at the time of the report's production, and to Railtrack Plc, who undertook to disseminate the relevant findings of the report to the other TOCs.

In carrying out its function of monitoring compliance with safety regulations, the Health and Safety Executive's Railway Inspectorate will take account of this report's safety recommendations.

Rail Journey Statistics

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list, for each franchise holder, the most recent statistics relating to the percentage of rail journeys delayed and cancelled. [2458]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Franchising Director has today published the third quarterly OPRAF Performance bulletin which contains the information requested. I have placed a copy in the Library.

Trunk Roads Programme

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to review the trunk roads programme. [2475]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We intend to announce details of the review shortly.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research has been commissioned and what estimates have been made by his Department, and what information presented to him, regarding the costs per annum to the Department of Transport budget of the introduction of a minimum wage at (a) £3.50 an hour, (b) £4 an hour and (c) £4.40 an hour; and if he will make a statement. [2125]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to him in the Official Report, Monday 9 June, column 310, by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

Aviation Standards

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for an increase in inspections of Moroccan-registered aircraft following the FAA's announcement that Morocco fails to meet international aviation standards. [2654]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have no evidence to suggest that Moroccan-registered aircraft flying to the UK are unsafe and have no current plans to inspect such aircraft. Morocco has applied for an assessment under the International Civil Aviation Organisation's safety oversight programme and we will review the position once that assessment has been carried out.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will consider the introduction of a scheme similar to that operated by the Federal Aviation Administration for identifying countries that do not meet international aviation standards. [2650]

Ms Jackson: We consider it more effective to balance support for international programmes assessing the safety oversight of countries with firm action with respect to any aircraft flying to the United Kingdom that are found not to be conforming to international safety standards.

We are continuing to contribute to the safety assessments being carried out by the International Civil Aviation Organisation (ICAO) and are taking a leading role in an initiative by the European Civil Aviation Conference (ECAC) to increase the number of inspections of foreign aircraft using ECAC airports, to share the results and other safety information and to organise joint actions when appropriate.

Since 1 May we have asked the Civil Aviation Authority to carry out inspections of eight foreign aircraft at UK airports. Two Nigerian-registered freight aircraft, were detained and we will not issue further permits in respect of Nigerian-registered aircraft until we are assured of their safe operation.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will identify the location of the site for the disposal of nuclear waste referred to as site 6. [297]

Mr. Battle: Following the dismissal of Nirex's appeal against refusal of planning permission for a Rock Characterisation Facility at Sellafield, the company has no plans to commence investigations at sites there or elsewhere. Revealing the location of potential sites in these circumstances could unnecessarily cause anxiety to people living nearby.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade over what time scale radioactive wastes arising from the reprocessing of Italian Magnox fuel will be returned to their country of origin. [1796]

Mr. Battle: The magnox reprocessing contract with ENEL signed in 1979 included an option for BNFL to return waste to Italy. The contract, and its terms, has been the subject of an exchange of Letters between the Governments of the United Kingdom and the Republic of Italy.

Wastes arising from the reprocessing of the fuel will be returned to their country of origin as soon as it practicable. BNFL is currently negotiating with ENEL on the form and timescale for such waste return.

Plutonium

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what provision has been set aside in the accounts of Magnox Electric for the long term management of the United Kingdom plutonium inventory. [1792]

Mr. Battle: Magnox Electric makes provisions in its accounts for the long term (100 years) storage and subsequent retrieval of all plutonium arising from the reprocessing of its spent magnox fuel. The current provision is some £200 million (3 per cent. discounted net present value).

Mr. Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade over what time scale it is planned to use plutonium fuel in Magnox reactors. [1793]

Mr. Battle: Magnox Electric plc has no plans to use plutonium or MOX fuel in its magnox reactors.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial responsibility for the plutonium stockpiles arising from the reprocessing of advanced gas reactor fuel is borne by public funds. [1794]

Mr. Battle: Financial responsibility for the plutonium expected to arise from the reprocessing of AGR fuel rests with utilities in the private sector with the exception of a small amount, less than 1 per cent. arising from the Windscale AGR at Sellafield.

BNFL

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of the total future financial liabilities that would arise in the United Kingdom, as reported by the OECD in 1996, would fall to BNFL to disburse. [1779]

Mr. Battle: The OECD indicative scheduled disbursement of provisions for liabilities in the UK shows cumulative expenses as £45 billion to the year 2100. BNFL's published accounts indicate total costs for liabilities at their sites as £17.3 billion (undiscounted). BNFL's own share of future liabilities at 31 March 1996 are £2.6 billion (undiscounted).

Details of, and information relating to, provisions for total future liabilities for which BNFL are liable, are contained in the company's annual report and accounts, copies of which are in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) over what time scale she plans that Magnox Electric will merge with BNFL; [1795]

(2) what financial arrangements have been requested by BNFL in connection with the merger with Magnox Electric. [1797]

Mr. Battle: The aim is that integration should take place in two key stages. The first stage, transfer of the Government's shares in Magnox Electric to BNFL, should take place in the autumn with the second stage, full integration of the combined businesses of the two companies expected to be completed about 12 months after that, subject to the companies meeting the requirements of the relevant regulators. Constructive discussions on the detailed arrangements for the merger, including the financial arrangements, are continuing between all parties, including BNFL, Magnox Electric and my Department.

Part-time Employees

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to extend the legal safeguards against unfair discrimination by employers in respect of part-time employees. [2086]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Part-time workers have equal statutory rights with full-time workers and their rights have been clarified in recent court judgments, which we welcome. At present the Government have no plans to introduce further legislation on part-time work.

The social partners at European reached an agreement on part-time work on 6 June 1997. The Commission may consequently decide to consult member states on a measure to implement this agreement. They have asked the Commission to propose that this agreement be implemented by the Council. The Government will consider any proposal, when it is submitted to Council, against the Government's criteria of promoting employability and competitiveness.

Funeral Services

Mr. Green: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action she plans to take to prevent anti-competitive monopolies developing among funeral directors and crematoria. [2022]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: I am aware of concerns which have been aired.

The Director-General of Fair Trading is responsible for investigating possible anti-competitive and monopolistic practices. He has no plans to take action against funeral directors and crematoria, but has powers to act if the evidence suggests that there is cause for concern. Anyone with evidence of anti-competitive or monopolistic behaviour should forward the information to the Director-General.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Miller: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will refer the sale of British Rail International Ltd to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. [2006]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The Office of Fair Trading is making inquiries to establish whether the acquisition of British Rail International Limited by Grandes Lignes International SA may constitute a qualifying merger situation under the Fair Trading Act 1973. If so, the Director-General of Fair Trading will advise whether or not it should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board will take her decision in the light of that advice.

Renewable Energy

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how she plans to promote renewable energy sources; [2232]

(2) if she will make a statement on the impact of the reduction in the Non-Fossil Fuel Levy in April on subsidies for renewable energy projects; [2230]

(3) if she will make a statement on the current levels of financial support and projected levels of support in each of the next five years, for (a) fossil fuel industries, (b) wind power, (c) solar electricity, (d) wave power and (e) nuclear power. [2233]

Mr. Battle: The Government propose to undertake a new and strong drive to develop renewable energy sources in line with our manifesto commitment. To this end I anticipate reviewing policy including considerations of what would be necessary and practicable to achieve 10 per cent. of UK's electricity needs from renewables by the year 2010 and how renewables can make an effective contribution to meeting requirements for future greenhouse gas reduction commitments. I will make a further announcement in due course. In the meantime the Government's new and renewable energy programme, currently underway will continue. I have already announced that I will initiative shortly a consultation exercise with the relevant trade bodies of the renewable energy industry, OFFER, and the Regional Electricity Companies on a fifth Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation (NFFO) Order for renewable energy in England and Wales, leading to an announcement later in the year.

The reduction in the rate of the Fossil Fuel Levy from 3.7 per cent. to 2.2 per cent. with effect from 1 April 1997 was due to reduced payments to the nuclear industry. The reduction had no effect on the level of support for renewable energy projects.

Over the coming months the Government will be considering the balance of activities within the spending plans it inherited to ensure that they reflect the Government's priorities. The results of my reviews of NFFO 5 and renewable energy policy will be fed into this wider exercise. The Department's expenditure plans for the Government's renewable energy; nuclear; clean coal; oil and gas; and environment programmes for the three year's 1997–98 to 1999–2000 may be found on page 37 of "Trade and Industry: The Government's Expenditure Plans 1997–98 to 1999–2000". A copy of the Plans is available in the Library of the House. Historical expenditure information on the Government's wind, solar and wave programmes is also available from my Department.

EU Regional Aid

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what submissions her Department has made to the European Commission concerning the review of funds available under objective 2 of European regional aid. [2167]

Mrs. Roche: The Government and local partners have been negotiating since August 1996 with the Commission on the programmes for grant in 12 European structural funds objective 2 areas in Britain for the period 1997–99. The Commission has now adopted the majority of these programmes and is likely to complete the remainder shortly.

For the period from 2000 onwards, the money available under objective 2 and the other objectives depends on Commission proposals for future financing of the EU and for reform of the structural funds. It is likely to put proposals forward after the completion of the Inter-Governmental conference. The Government have not put forward detailed submissions at this early stage, but we are looking for a package which is affordable, simpler and more efficient, and fair.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the United Kingdom qualifies for contributions from the EU/EEC cohesion fund on the basis of (i) 1993, (ii) 1994, (iii) 1995 and (iv) 1996 gross domestic product figures. [2381]

Mrs. Roche: No. Article 2.1 of the Cohesion Fund Regulation restricts eligibility to member states with a per capita gross national product (GNP), measured in purchasing power parities (PPP), of less than 90 per cent. of the Community average and which have a programme leading to the fulfilment of the conditions of economic convergence referred to in Article 104c of the EC Treaty. The United Kingdom does not qualify: its per capita GNP (PPP) has been and is above this level.

Atlantic Frontier

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the environmental impact of the Atlantic frontier development; and on what evidence this assessment has been made. [2430]

Mr. Battle: An assessment of environmental impact and a shoreline sensitivity study were carried out by BP in relation to its applications for consent to develop the Foinaven and Schiehallion discoveries. In addition, the largest offshore environmental study ever undertaken in UK waters was carried out to the west of Shetland on behalf of a group of oil companies by the Southhampton Oceanography Centre. An area the size of Wales was surveyed and much valuable information was acquired. The results of this work provide baseline environmental data as part of the work companies must do to satisfy Government environmental requirements.

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has in respect of further development at the Atlantic frontier; and if she will make a statement. [2431]

Mr. Battle: Two developments have already been approved in the Atlantic Margin: the Foinaven and Schiehallion fields operated by BP. Other discoveries are identified in the "Energy Report 1997", a copy of which is available in the Library. My Department will continue to consider proposals of further development in this oil and gas province which respect the environmental sensitivities of the area and the interests of the other sea users.

Clean Coal Technology

Mr Gummer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what reduction in CO_2 emissions is made when so-called clean coal technology is used instead of other existing forms of generation. [2641]

Mr. Battle: The tables set out the reductions in CO_2 emissions from various clean coal power generation technologies currently available or under development compared with a reference conventional pulverised coal plant. The information was provided by IEA Coal Research—The Clean Coal Centre and will appear in a report to be published later this year by the Centre. The table indicates some 20–30 per cent. reduction may be possible if clean coal plant replaces existing conventional coal plant. however all coal fired generation releases significantly more CO_2 per unit of electricity than combined cycle gas turbine stations and there would be an increase in emissions if clean coal plant replaced such plant. There would also be an increase in emissions of CO_2 if clean coal plant replaced oil fired plant, nuclear or renewables sources of energy.

Coal Subsidies

Mr. Gummer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she plans to meet her German counterpart to explain the environmental advantage of reducing and then eliminating subsidies on coal. [2671]

Mr. Battle: I have noted with concern a report by the World Bank indicating that subsidies for coal in the OECD area are associated with 1.5 per cent. of the total CO_2 emissions. German subsidies account for the bulk of this. I mean to press for the elimination of all coal subsidies throughout the European coal and steel community by the time the ECSC is wound up in 2002, and I will support the Commission vigorously in ensuring progressive reduction in state aid paid to the European coal industry over this period.

It is not our policy to subsidise UK coal producers, nor to tolerate subsidised imports into the UK, whether from Germany or elsewhere. UK coal is by far the lowest cost coal produced within the ECSC, and is generally accepted as the only ECSC production with a long-term prospect of viability. I am therefore concerned that UK coal exports should not be disadvantaged over the period to 2002 by subsidies given to other ECSC producers; and we will press the Commission to deny approval to such state aids, unless arrangements have first been put in place for removing any consequential market distortions against UK coal available for sale within the ECSC.

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

Mr. Gummer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to extend the non-fossil fuel obligation so that it is available to subsidise fossil fuels. [2672]

Mr. Battle: I am currently considering the options for the longer term future of the NFFO, and I will make a further announcement in due course. Extending the scope of NFFO to include other forms of energy would need primary legislation and clearance from the European Commission.

Commercial Debt

Mr. Cotter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to protect small businesses against the late payment of commercial debt. [2637]

Mrs. Roche: The Government will introduce a comprehensive range of measures to address the late payment of commercial debt. These will include the introduction of legislation giving businesses a statutory right to claim interest on late payment of commercial debt, a review of the company reporting requirements and a requirement that Government Departments and local authorities pay their bills on time.

Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what tonnage of spent nuclear fuel elements has been reprocessed each year at (a) Sellafield and (b) Dounreay, listing the (i) initial uranium enrichment and spent fuel burn up rate composition and (ii) reactor and country origin, in each case since these plants became operational. [1844]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 2 June 1997]: Reprocessing operations are carried out at Sellafield by British Nuclear Fuels plc (BNFL) and at Dounreay by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (UKAEA). Since reprocessing operations began at Sellafield nearly 40 years ago, a total of around 40,000 tonnes of spent fuel have been reprocessed. Customers for spent fuel reprocessed at Sellafield are from the UK, Germany, Japan, Switzerland, Sweden, Spain, Netherlands, Canada and Italy. Information on the initial uranium enrichment and spent fuel burn up rate composition and reactor origin, since these plants became operational, can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. I have asked the Chairman of the UKAEA to provide the corresponding information in respect of Dounreay.

HEALTH

Minimum Wage

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been commissioned, what estimates have been made by his department and what information presented to him, regarding the costs per annum to the national health service of the introduction of a minimum wage at (a) £3.50 an hour, (b) £4 an hour and (c) £4.40 an hour; and if he will make a statement. [2104]

Mr. Milburn: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 9 June 1997, Official Report, column 310.

Eye Tests (Changes)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations he has received concerning the effect of eye test charges on the incidence of eye disease; [2390]

(2) if he will abolish charges for eye tests; and if he will make a statement. [2389]

Mr. Milburn: The Royal National Institute for the Blind has sent us a report of a survey which suggests that, since 1988, people have been having their eyes tested at less frequent intervals.

Since 1989 the availability of free National Health Service sight tests has been restricted to children, people on low incomes and people at particular risk of eye disease. We will be reviewing these arrangements.

Paramedics (Voluntary Work)

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue guidance to national health service ambulance trusts in respect of paramedics carrying out voluntary work with the British Red Cross in their spare time. [2359]

Mr. Milburn: We have no plans to issue such guidance. Matters of this kind are between the trust concerned and its employees at a local level.

High Dependency Beds

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many high dependency unit beds there are in (a) Hartlepool General Hospital, (b) Dryburn Hospital and (c) Sunderland Royal Hospital. [2459]

Mr. Milburn: The "Bed availability for England" book, copies of which are available in the Library, contains information by individual National Health Service providers, i.e., trusts, directly managed units and the special health authorities with summary tables for England. Data are collected by broad ward classification rather than by clinical specialty. Although the broad ward classification—"General Patients—Other ages—intensive" may include high dependency unit beds it is not possible to identify these separately. Returns are made on a financial year basis and the latest year for which data are available is 1995–96.

Following a review of central requirements, the return was changed for 1996–97 to collect information on the number of beds (a) available and (b) occupied. Figures from this new return will be published for the first time later this year.

Water Fluoridation

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the reasons for continuing to allow the fluoridation of water in some parts of the United Kingdom. [2365]

Mr. Milburn: The overwhelming weight of medical, dental and scientific opinion throughout the world considers water fluoridation, at the optimum level of 1 part per million in temperate climates, to be a safe and effective means of reducing dental decay, particularly among children.

Mobile Phones and Electric Blankets (Health Risks)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment his Department has made of the potential health risks posed by mobile phone usage; and if he will make a statement; [2723]

(2) what assessment he has made of the possible health risks connected to the use of electric blankets; and if he will make a statement. [2710]

Ms Jowell: The Department obtains advice from the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) on the risks to health of exposure to electromagnetic fields.

The NRPB's advice is based on its own careful assessment of published scientific studies and those carried out by the World Health Organisation, by the NRPB Advisory Group on Non-ionising Radiation, under the chairmanship of Professor Sir Richard Doll, and by the International Commission on Non-ionising Radiation.

The NRPB's advice is that there is no convincing scientific evidence that exposure to microwave radiation associated with mobile phone and electric blanket usage is harmful to human health.

Medical Drug Donations

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) which 10 developing countries received the greatest quantities of medicinal drug donations from United Kingdom companies and charities for (a) emergency relief and (b) general medicinal use in 1996–97; and if he will make a statement; [2728]

(2) what estimate she has made of the number of tonnes of medicinal drugs donated to developing countries (a) directly by pharmaceutical companies and (b) via charities each year for (i) emergency relief and (ii) general medicinal use; and if he will make a statement; [2727]

(3) what estimate he has made of the total numbers of charitable organisations and commercial bodies which donate medicinal drugs to (a) the Baltic states, (b) Haiti, (c) Africa and (d) Romania. [2756]

Ms Jowell: We do not hold information on the numbers of charities and companies who make drug donations nor on the types or volume of drugs donated.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to meet United States representatives to discuss the provision of tax incentives for firms donating medicinal drugs to developing countries; and if he will make a statement. [2691]

Ms Jowell: None.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the World Health Organisations's guidelines on drug donations; and what proposals he has to improve them; [2757]

(2) what plans he has to implement the World Health Organisation's guidelines on drug donations to third world and former eastern bloc countries. [2758]

Ms Jowell: The Government supports the World Health Organisations's Guidelines for drug donations, which were published in May 1996. These give advice to both donating and recipient member states on safety, quality, and labelling. The United Kingdom pharmaceutical industry is aware of the WHO guidelines. The Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain also provides similar guidance to its members on redirection of medicines overseas.

The UK currently holds the chair of the WHO's Drugs Action Programme Management Advisory Committee which regularly reviews progress on implementation of the guidelines and assess the need for improvements.

Dental Services

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he had made of the numbers of dental patients who have not used their dentist for two years or more and have subsequently (a) been deregistered by their local dental board and (b) been charged a £30 emergency fee before any new treatment and reregistration; and by what method patients are informed of the imposition of that charge. [2307]

Mr. Milburn: In 1996–97 4.1 million adult registrations lapsed automatically after a period of two years during which the patient had not attended a dentist. There is no National Health Service charge for registering or re-registering with a dentist.

Cannabis

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to allow trials of cannabis sativa in the treatment of multiple sclerosis, glaucoma, cerebral palsy and nausea caused by chemotherapy. [2263]

Ms Jowell: Misuse of drugs legislation allows for research involving cannabis under Home Office licence. Any proposed clinical trial would have to be submitted to the Medicines Control Agency for approval on exemption in accordance with the Medicines Act 1968. Any application for a licence or a certificate, or both, would be carefully considered.

HIV/AIDS

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what additional funding for HIV/AIDS therapy has been allocated in light of the increased availability of more effective HIV/AIDS drug treatments; and if he will make a statement; [2432]

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure full availability of combination therapies, counselling services, dietetic treatments, in-patient services, psychiatric support in the community and district nurse services and other necessary services for HIV/AIDS patients; and if he will make a statement. [2436]

Ms Jowell: The Department has allocated a total of £199.6 million for HIV/AIDS treatment and care in 1997–98. This represents a seven per cent. increase over the allocation for 1996–97 as a contribution towards new combination therapies and the Department is keeping in close touch with health authorities, clinicians and others on developments in this area and the costs and benefits associated with them.

The treatment and care budget, which is allocated to health authorities in line with the number of AIDS cases, is intended to cover services for people with HIV and AIDS as determined through local needs assessment and priorities.

Health Authority Deficit

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) health trusts and (b) health authorities in England were in deficit on 1 April 1996; and by what amounts. [2755]

Mr. Milburn: The details of all trusts' 1995–96 Income and Expenditure positions drawn from audited accounts is available in the Library. Information on 1995–96 district health authorities' Income and Expenditure positions also drawn from audited accounts have been placed in the Library. Due to a different accounting basis these figures are not directly comparable with those placed in the Library on 2 June which provided information relating to 1996–97.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is the policy of Ministers to exclude clinical services from the PFI in all circumstances. [2494]

Mr. Milburn: Clinical services should not be included as part of a Private Finance Initiative (PFI) scheme.

NHS Trusts (Appointments)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date he intends to reappoint the membership of the boards of (a) West Cumbria Health Care Trust, (b) the north Cumbria Health Care Authority and (c) the Cumbria Ambulance Trust. [2495]

Mr. Milburn: The terms of appointment of those appointed to these boards are as follows:

	Appointed from	Appointed to
West Cumbria Health Care NHS Trust
Eric Urquhart (Chairman)	1 November 1996	31 October 2000

Ruth Popple	1 April 1996	31 March 2000
Paul Groom	1 April 1996	31 March 1998
Lynne Quinion	1 April 1996	31 March 1998

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many appointments to boards of NHS trusts are due to be made in the next round of reappointments. [2496]

Mr. Milburn: The total number of National Health Service trust board appointments due in the 1997 round is 910, comprising 149 chairman appointments and 761 non-executive directors. In addition, there are 73 current vacancies to be filled.

Aluminium (Health Risks)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the possible health risks connected to the use of aluminium containers; and if he will make a statement. [2711]

Ms Jowell: Dietary survey data indicate that the intake of aluminium in the United Kingdom, which includes the contribution from aluminium containers, is well within international safety limits.

Smoking

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what percentage of adult (a) men and (b) women in the United Kingdom are cigarette smokers, in each 10 year age band; and if he will make a statement. [2713]

Ms Jowell: Estimates of the number and percentage of adult men and women cigarette smokers in England 1994 are shown in the table. Questions relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland, respectively.

Cigarette smoking amongst adults, by age and gender

All persons	28	5,237,000	25	5,019,000

1. The percentages have been calculated from the ONS General Household Survey 1993–94.

2. The number of smokers has been estimated using Office for National Statistics mid-year population estimates as at 30 June 1994, and the percentage of smokers.

3. Percentages have been rounded to the nearest whole figure. The estimates of the number of smokers have been rounded to the nearest thousand.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals his Department has to collect centrally the numbers of people suffering from Alzheimer's disease. [2714]

Mr. Boateng: We have no plans to collect this information centrally. It is estimated that there are currently around 600,000 sufferers of dementia in England.

National Health Service (Primary Care) Act

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to amend the National Health Service (Primary Care) Act 1997; and if he will make a statement. [2831]

Mr. Milburn: We are currently considering the development of primary care services including implementation of the National Health Service (Primary Care) Act 1997. No final decisions have yet been reached.

Emergency Readmissions

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for (a) the South East Thames regional health authority, (b) the East Sussex, Brighton and Hove health authority and (c) each of the NHS trusts operating within the East Sussex, Brighton and Hove health authority area (1) the number of emergency readmissions within 28 days for the periods (i) 1 April 1995 to 30 September 1995, (ii) 1 October 1995 to 31 March 1996, (iii) 1 April 1996 to 30 September 1996 and (iv) 1 October 1996 to 31 March 1997 and (2) the figures in (1) above expressed as a percentage of the total number of operations carried out. [2832]

Mr. Milburn: Since April 1996 the National Health Service Executive has collected information on patients aged 75 and over who are readmitted as an emergency within 28 days of discharge, for all specialties except psychiatry, by health authority. The information for East Sussex, Brighton and Hove Health Authority is as follows:

East Sussex, Brighton and Hove HA	1 April 1996 to 30 September 1996	1 October 1996 to 31 March 1997
Readmissions within 28 days	728	928
Live discharges	16,756	16,190
Readmissions/discharges	4.3 per cent.	5.7 per cent.

Source:
NHS quarterly monitoring returns table QMX7, lines 03 and 05.

At present the NHS Executive only collects data on emergency readmissions within 28 days for patients aged 75 and over.

(The hon. Member may wish to contact the health authorities and trusts directly to enquire whether the information is collected locally).

Carers

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how he intends to insure that carers are aware of their rights under the Carers Recognition and Services Act 1995. [2872]

Mr. Boateng: The Department's Guidance and Practice Guide on implementing the Act require social services departments to ensure that their published information on community care tells carers about their rights under the Act.

Information should be available to carers when they need it; it should be accessible to all members of the community and easy to understand. It should also be part of routine assessment practice and, specifically, authorities are expected to inform carers who appear to be eligible under the Act of their right to request an assessment.

As part of our programme of research on community care, we are considering the impact of the Act. An inspection by the Social Services Inspectorate is also in preparation, which will look at how local authorities are implementing the Act.

Private Finance Initiative

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Private Finance Initiative in the national health service. [2814]

Mr. Milburn: I intend to undertake an urgent exercise to prioritise all the major Private Finance Initiative (PFI) schemes in the acute sector. I have today written to all Members, giving full details of the steps I intend to take and setting out the way forward for the PFI in the National Health Service.

The need to prioritise the schemes currently battling for the limited private and public sector resources is now understood and accepted. Only if resources are concentrated on those schemes with the greatest need will real progress be made and schemes delivered.

The prioritisation exercise will cover all the major acute schemes on the current project list that have an approved Outline Business Case. They will be given separate gradings regarding health service need, how well the scheme fits with the PFI process and hence its likelihood of delivering a successful outcome, and how far and well negotiations have progressed.

The health service need will consider the service's own assessment of the medical and estates reasons for completing the scheme.

The fit and deliverability (or PFI-ability) of the scheme will evaluate if the scheme is one that is likely to prove attractive to the private sector. Too many inherently unsuitable schemes were forced to test for PFI and we must not be seen to be unnecessarily prolonging that process.

The third criteria will be how well and far negotiations have progressed. If we are to concentrate resources on the leading schemes, it is clearly a nonsense to allow the system to become further clogged by new schemes entering the process. Equally, many schemes have become stalled because the system is overloaded and these cannot be left to stagnate.

Performance of each of the schemes against these criteria will form the basis for the selection of the schemes that will proceed. Final announcements regarding the fate of all the schemes will be made at the end of June. During this time, I am making myself available to receive representations from constituency members. No final decision will be taken on any of the schemes without Members having had the opportunity to personally represent their own and their constituents' wishes. The prioritisation exercise is going to be fair and genuine.

There will be a separate exercise for London PFI schemes arising from our Review of health services in the capital which will be announced in due course.

Those schemes that fail to make the list, for whatever reason, will be prioritised nationally alongside schemes that are competing for the limited public capital we have. We will only invite competition for the schemes that have a genuine health need and can be delivered.

In conjunction with this work on prioritisation, I will be looking over the coming months at improving the PFI product in terms of fostering innovation; resolving affordability and delivering PFI solutions in non-acute fields like primary care and mental health. In addition, I will also be looking, more fundamentally, at developing other possible models of structuring private finance schemes in the longer term.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Minimum Wage

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research has been commissioned and what estimates have been made by his Department and what information presented to him, regarding the costs per annum to the MAFF budget of the introduction of a minimum wage at (a) £3.50 an hour, (b) £4 an hour and (c) £4.40 an hour; and if he will make a statement. [2107]

Mr. Morley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 9 June 1997, Official Report, column 310, by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

BSE

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates have been drawn to his attention as to the cost to the meat industry of BSE. [2798]

Mr. Rooker: There have been several studies which have addressed certain aspects of the costs of BSE, but I am not aware of any estimates of the total cost to the meat industry. However, the Ministry has commissioned an independent study to provide a comprehensive assessment of the economic impact of BSE across the whole UK economy and within particular regions. The study is expected to be completed during September 1997.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to what extent the selective cull is required in order to meet the target date of 2001 in terms of BSE eradication. [2801]

Mr. Rooker: The year 2001 is not a target date for BSE eradication, but an estimate of the time when the BSE epidemic will have reached insignificant levels based on research carried out by Professor Anderson of Oxford University and his team, in collaboration with Wilesmith and others at VLA and published in Nature, volume 382. The purpose of the selective cull is to accelerate the rate of decline in the epidemic by removing animals which are likely to become BSE cases and to comply with the pre-conditions of the Florence Agreement made in June 1996.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will consult food consumer groups on the case for a judicial inquiry into the handling of the BSE crisis. [2799]

Mr. Rooker: I intend to have close contacts with consumer groups, and will be happy to hear their views on all aspects of the BSE crisis, including the case for an inquiry.

Ruminant Feed

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence has been drawn to the attention of his Department that ruminant feed is being fed to pigs, poultry, lamb and fish. [2797]

Mr. Rooker: We have received no evidence that feed intended for ruminants is being fed to pigs, poultry and fish. As ruminants, lambs receive ruminant feed.

Lacto-vegetarians and Vegans

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has of the percentage of the UK population currently (a) lacto-vegetarian and (b) vegan; and if he will make a statement. [2712]

Mr. Rooker: Data collected as part of a recent MAFF-funded survey of the diets of vegetarians suggested that approximately 2 per cent. of the population of Great Britain aged 15 and over are vegetarian, a further 3 per cent. consider themselves to be vegetarians but also eat fish, and 0.3 per cent. are vegan. We do not have equivalent figures for the UK, nor any readily available information on the percentage of the population who are lacto-vegetarian.

SOCIAL SECURITY

State Retirement Pensions (Overseas Residents)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she plans to introduce proposals on the uprating of state retirement pensions to people resident abroad; and if she will make a statement. [583]

Mr. Denham: State Retirement Pensions are uprated within the European Economic Area and in certain countries with which the United Kingdom has a Social Security agreement which provides for uprating.

The Government has no plans at present to introduce proposals on the uprating of pensions paid to people living in other countries. There are competing demands and constraints on Social Security spending, and it would be wrong to raise expectations that uprating these pensions would be likely to attract priority under current circumstances.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to reform the jobseeker's allowance. [1466]

Mr. Bradley: Our Welfare to Work objectives are to provide work incentives, to reduce poverty and welfare dependency and to strike a new balance between rights and responsibilities. As the main benefit for the unemployed, Jobseeker's Allowance will have a major role to play in the transition from benefit to work, and an extensive programme of monitoring and evaluation is under way to enable us to ensure that it is achieving these objectives.

In addition to this major evaluation exercise, we shall also keep the individual benefit rules under consideration as we develop our plans.

Departmental Computer Systems

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to ensure that her Department's computer systems are millennium compliant; and if she will make a statement. [1243]

Mr. Bradley: The Department's main computer systems have been fully analysed for Year 2000 compliance. Plans to complete the necessary changes are being implemented. All the major benefit and recording computer systems supporting the day-to-day delivery of Social Security will be amended by the end of 1998 to permit a full year's processing before the year 2000.

Analysis is continuing to assess the year 2000 implications for the Department's administrative, support and non IT systems.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by what means her Department makes available its publications in (a) Braille, (b) audio tape and (c) large print; and how this is publicised. [1667]

Mr. Frank Field: The Department and its agencies makes its publications in Braille, audio cassette and large print available by various means.

"A Catalogue of leaflets, posters, and information" (CAT 1) fully lists the Departmental information that is available in alternative formats and a copy has been sent to the hon. Member. This is mailed out to 90,000 intermediaries and advisers annually. Additionally, a Benefits Agency quarterly newsletter, Touchbase, mailed to these advisers, includes advertising on the availability of these products.

Information regarding alternative formats can also be obtained through the various Departmental help lines. The lines themselves are publicised widely through intermediaries, telephone directories, CAT 1, local offices and advertising and direct marketing campaigns.

Benefits Agency information in braille and on audio cassettes is also available from the Royal National Institute for the Blind (RNIB) which also lists BA products in their magazines such as Spotlight, Welcome to a World of:, New Beacon and The Bibliography Reading List.

The Benefits Agency is also represented at exhibitions such as Naidex, Nacab and Vision '97 where alternative formats are always made available. Also the Department liaises with employers, intermediaries and advisers, often through mailings, to make them aware of new publications which may be relevant to their employees, clients and customers.

Information about alternative formats is also available from all local Social Security offices.

State Pension

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to amend the rules with regard to downrating of the state retirement pension for pensioners who are in hospital for six weeks or more. [2499]

Mr. Denham: Most Social Security benefits, including Retirement Pension, are reduced after a period in hospital. These rules have been applied, with only minor modifications, since the introduction of the National Insurance scheme on the basis that State funds should not make double provision for the same needs. There are no plans to amend these rules.

Old Age Pension

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will review the 25 pence per week additional payment for the over 80-year-olds. [2500]

Mr. Denham: We will examine means of delivering more automatic help to the poorest pensioners, many of whom are over 80. We will also retain the basic state pension as the foundation of pension provision and increase its value at least in line with prices.

Second-tier Pension

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the Government's plans to establish a state second-tier pension. [2501]

Mr. Denham: We will be setting up a review of the central areas of insecurity for the elderly which will cover second tier pensions including SERPS. We intend to retain SERPS for those who wish to remain in it and will seek to develop the administrative structure of SERPS so as to create a "citizenship pension" for those who assume responsibility as carers and as a result lose out on the pension entitlements they would otherwise acquire.

We will also be developing a new framework of stakeholder pensions to provide value for money, flexible and secure second pensions particularly for those on low and modest incomes, with changing patterns of employment, and who cannot join an employee occupational scheme. These will be based on new partnerships between financial service companies, employers and employees.

Housing Benefit (Single People)

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will withdraw the regulations on housing benefit for single people aged 25 to 60 years which were announced on 26 November 1996. [2833]

Mr. Bradley: Measures to restrict Housing Benefit for single people under the age of 60 were inherited from the previous administration and the reduction in expenditure this entails form part of Departmental expenditure plans. We are reviewing those plans and will announce our decision shortly.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the current status of the document, "Benefits Agency (Wales), the Blueprint for the Future"; and what assessment she has made of its proposals. [2839]

Mr. Field: The "Benefits Agency Wales—Blueprint for the Future" consultation document was published on 15 November 1996 and the period of public consultation was extended to 28 February 1997. Representations received during the consultation period will be considered by Ministers in due course, and announcements will be made in the light of these considerations.

These representations will be considered by Ministers in due course, and announcements will be made in the light of these considerations.

We will be assessing our proposals in the light of this document, and also each of the proposed Benefits Agency initiatives which are part of the Department's current programme to ensure that they will provide the improved services, better security and value for money that we want to see in a modernised Social Security system.

Announcements will be made in due course.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Departmental Publications

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland by what means her Department makes available its publications in (a) Braille, (b) audio tape and (c) large print; and how this is publicised. [1663]

Mr. Worthington: The Department of Health and Social Services has adopted a policy that all documents addressed to the workforce or the public should be in a reasonably large font and should also be considered for publication in alternative formats such as Braille, large print, audio or video tape.

All published documents contact information on the availability of the document in alternative formats.

The Department also works closely with the appropriate voluntary bodies in the drafting and distribution of material published in alternative formats.

Sewers

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to install main sewers at Derryboye crossroads near Saintfield, Co. Down.[1933]

Mr. Murphy: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Water Service under its Chief Executive, Mr. H. R. F. Plester. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from H. R. F. Plester to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 5 June 1997:

Lord Dubs has asked me to reply to your parliamentary question asking what plans Water Service has to install main sewers at Derryboye crossroads near Saintfield, Co Down.

Water Service has no plans to install a sewerage system at this location. It does, however, provide a septic tank desludging service which is available to rural householders in such circumstances.

Secret Societies

Mr. Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she plans to legislate to require (a) police officers, (b) members of the judiciary and magistrates, (c) counsel and solicitors, (d) CPS prosecutors, (e) probation and (f) prison officers to disclose publicly their membership of secret societies. [1919]

Mr. Ingram: There are no present plans to so legislate.

The Home Affairs Committee Report on Freemasonry in the Police and the Judiciary was published in March this year. Mr right hon. Friend, the Minister of State at the Home Office has recently advised the clerk of the Committee that the issues in the report are being addressed in consultation with other Departments, including the Northern Ireland Office, with the aim of making a substantive response by the end of August.

Mr. Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to require secret societies to publish registers of their members; what assessment she has made of the potential threat to members of such societies from the publication of such registers; and if she will make a statement. [1920]

Mr. Ingram: There are no plans to require secret societies to publish registers of their members. Consequently there has been no assessment made of the potential threat to members of such societies from the publication of such registers.

SPARD Scheme

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the last payments on the SPARD scheme will be issued to farmers. [2016]

Mr. Murphy: The Department has approved projected expenditure by farmers in the SPARD Scheme up to 31 March 1999 and to the extent that the projects are carried out and translate into actual claims, final payments will be made by that date.

Abbatoir (Saintfield)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will order a public inquiry into the application for an abbatoir at Saintfield Livestock Market; and if she will commission an environmental impact statement in accordance with the Environmental Effects Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1989. [2017]

Mr. Murphy: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Planning Service under its Chief Executive, Mr. T. W. Stewart. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from T. W. Stewart to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 6 June 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about a Public Inquiry and the commissioning of an environmental impact statement in relation to a planning application for an abbatoir at Saintfield Livestock Mart.

This planning application, which was received in April 1997, has been the subject of a large number of objections. The Department determined that the proposal fell within the scope of Category 7(f) of Schedule 2 of the Environmental Effects Regulations (NI) 1989 and the applicant was requested to submit an Environmental Statement on 2 May 1997. The applicant had until 30 May 1997 to confirm acceptance or appeal against this determination. There has been no appeal lodged and the applicant must now either submit the Environmental Statement or withdraw the application.

If an Environmental Statement is submitted it will be publicly advertised and all interested parties will have an opportunity to make representations. A decision on the way forward, including the need for a Public Inquiry, can only be taken once the Environmental Statement has been received and the consultative responses have been fully considered. It is unlikely that any decision on the need for a Public Inquiry will be taken until Autumn 1997, at the earliest.

I do hope you find this helpful and I will, of course, let you know once a decision on the way forward has been taken.

Housing Development (Newtownards)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment her Department has made of the wildlife effects of an application to build three houses at 55 Crawfordsburn Road, Newtownard, upon the area known as the Golden Glen. [2018]

Mr. Murphy: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Environment and Heritage Service under its chief executive, Mr. Robert Martin. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. S. Faulkner to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 4 June 1997:

As Chief Executive of Environment and Heritage Service (EHS), Mr. Robert Martin is responsible for all operational aspects of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland's environmental policies. On his behalf I am responding to the Parliamentary Question which you put down in the House of Commons on Wednesday, 4 June 1997, regarding the impact on wildlife of a planning application to build 3 houses at 55 Crawfordsburn Road, Newtownards.

I wish to confirm that the application submitted for development at the above location was passed for comment by Planning Service to Environment and Heritage Service. After consideration of the content of the application EHS is of the opinion that the proposal will have no direct impact on the nature conservation value of the Golden Glen. Development does not extend down to the edge of the pond and the majority of the woodland will be retained undisturbed. As a safeguard however, although no signs of badger activity were noted in the areas to be impacted by development, EHS will recommend to Planning Service that a badger survey be undertaken by a recognised expert.

I trust you will find this reply helpful.

Pedestrian Crossing (Newtownards)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what plans she has to install a pedestrian crossing at the junction of the Bangor and Belvedere Roads in Newtownards; and if she will commission a study of the demand for such a crossing; [2020]

(2) how many accidents have been reported at or around the Ballymacbrennan crossroads of the Saintfield and Comber Roads in the last five years; and what plans she has (a) to erect warning signs and (b) to use traffic management devices to slow traffic on the Comber Road at this point. [1921]

Mr. Murphy: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Roads Service and its Chief Executive, Mr. W. J. McCowbrey. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from W. J. McCoubrey to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 6 June 1997:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to your recently tabled PQ about the need for a pedestrian crossing at the Bangor Road/Belvedere Road junction, Newtownards.

Roads Service is not aware of any problems at this location. However, a survey to determine whether there is a need for a crossing will be carried out within the next few weeks. The Divisional Roads Manager, Mr McCandless, will write to you as soon as the outcome is known.

I hope you find this information helpful.

Letter from W. J. McCoubrey to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 6 June 1997:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to your recently tabled PQ about the Ballymacbrennan crossroads of the Saintfield and Comber Roads.

I have been informed by the RUC Central Statistics Unit that in the past 5 years (1992–1996 inclusive) there have been 4 personal injury accidents at this location. As existing signs and road layout are considered adequate there are no proposals to erect additional signs or to introduce any traffic management measures.

I hope you find this information helpful.

Housing Executive

Mr. Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to introduce provisions analogous to those contained in the Local Government Finance (Supplementary Credit Approvals) Bill to enable the Northern Ireland Housing Executive to expand its activities; and if she will make a statement. [1914]

Mr. Murphy: There is no need to introduce similar provisions. The Northern Ireland Housing Executive presently uses its housing capital receipts, including those from house sales, as an alternative to fresh borrowing to fund its capital works programmes.

Mr. Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she plans to proceed with proposals to subject Northern Ireland Housing Executive functions to compulsory competitive tendering; and if she will make a statement. [1918]

Mr. Murphy: The Government is committed to replacing compulsory competitive tendering with a duty on local authorities to achieve best value. I hope to make an announcement soon on the application of the best value approach for Housing Executive functions.

Royal Ulster Constabulary Anniversary

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which right hon. and hon. Members from Northern Ireland constituencies were invited to the service in St. Anne's Cathedral, Belfast to mark the 75th Anniversary of the Royal Ulster Constabulary. [2144]

Mr. Ingram: This is a matter for the Chief Constable. However, I understand that invitations to attend the service in St. Anne's Cathedral were extended to the leaders of the following Northern Ireland political parties: Ulster Unionist Party (Mr. David Trimble), Democratic Unionist Party (Rev. Dr. Ian Paisley), Social Democratic and Labour Party (Mr. John Hume), UK Unionist Party (Mr. Robert McCartney) and the Alliance Party (Lord Alderdice).

Minimum Wage

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what research has been commissioned and what estimates have been made by her Department and what information presented to her, regarding the costs per annum to the Northern Ireland Department's budget of the introduction of a minimum wage at (a) £3.50 an hour, (b) £4 an hour and (c) £4.40 an hour; and if she will make a statement. [2114]

Mr. Murphy: The Secretary of State has not specifically commissioned work on levels of minimum pay. However officials do address a range of pay scenarios during pay negotiations. As part of this year's pay negotiations the Trade Union has lodged a claim for a minimum wage of £4.42 per hour and officials calculate the cost of this for the non-industrial civil service to be in the region of £5 million. Calculations were also undertaken on the basis of £4 per hour and this would result in an additional cost in the region of £2.5 million.

United States (Discussions)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the names of those American politicians with whom she had discussions about the future of Northern Ireland on her recent visit to the United States. [2132]

Dr. Mowlam: During my visit to Washington, I had the opportunity to discuss a number of issues relating to Northern Ireland with various members of the House International Relations Committee, including Congressmen Benjamin Gilman (Chairman), Peter King, Richard Neal and Tom Manton; and with Senators Edward Kennedy, Christopher Dodd, Patrick Leahy and Joseph P. Kennedy II.

In addition I also had productive meetings with various representatives of the US Administration, including officials from the National Security Council, and the US Department of Commerce.

Occupational Therapy

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps will be taken to reduce the backlog of occupational therapist referrals; and if she will make a statement. [2166]

Mr. Worthington: Demand for occupational therapy assessments is rising as increasing numbers of dependent people opt to live in their own homes. The Department of Health and Social Services has been working closely with the Health and Social Services Boards and Trusts and, in the case of housing adaptation assessments with the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, to streamline procedures. Service level agreements are being put in place and a list of minor adaptations not requiring occupational therapy input has been agreed. I have asked the Boards to identify, as a matter of urgency, what further steps they can take to reduce waiting lists.

SCOTLAND

Disabled People

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will appoint a Minister to have responsibility for policy on disabled people. [2291]

Mr. Galbraith: My Ministerial responsibilities include disability issues and I will be working with Ministerial colleagues to ensure that all the needs of all disabled people are addressed.

Scottish Homes

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to allow Scottish Homes tenants the option of a local authority landlord in the event of a housing stock transfer. [2479]

Mr. Chisholm: We are reviewing the arrangements for the transfer of Scottish Homes' houses in the light of the Government's commitment to give tenants choice in their landlord.

Homelessness

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to tackle homelessness in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [2724]

Mr. Chisholm: A revised Code of Guidance on Homelessness will shortly be issued. It will give clear encouragement to local authorities that they should seek to secure, either at their own hand or from other housing providers, permanent rather than temporary accommodation for unintentionally homeless people in priority need. We have also allocated an additional £1 million for the Rough Sleepers Initiative this year, bringing the total available funding to £16 million over three years; and we are making available a further £2 million as the first instalment in a new long term initiative to bring empty homes back into use. Subject to a satisfactory evaluation, we will make additional funding available to the Scottish Homeless Advisory Service to extend it throughout Scotland.

Poverty

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to tackle poverty in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [2725]

Mr. Chisholm: The Government are committed to mounting a concerted attack against the multiple causes of social and economic decline. For many, the best path out of poverty is work, where it is appropriate. Our New Deal initiative will give young people opportunities to do so as part of our Welfare to Work programme. We also intend to provide help for people over the age of 25 who have been out of work for 2 years or more.

The Government's commitment is not restricted to those seeking work, but to all of the most deprived in our society. A significant way in which this is taken forward in areas with the worst concentrations of deprivation is through the multi-agency partnership approach to regeneration, established under Programme for Partnership, where comprehensive strategies are taken forward to improve the conditions in which local people live.

Islay (Air Services)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total subsidy for air services to Islay in (a) 1995 and (b) 1996; to which company the subsidy was awarded; and what obligations are placed on the company to run weekend services. [2855]

Mr. Chisholm: No subsidy is provided by either central or local government for scheduled air services to and from Islay.

Pennington Report

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response the Government have made to the recommendations of the Pennington report. [3509]

Mr. Dewar: The Government accept all the recommendations in the final Pennington Report. We are fully committed to introducing the measures which we believe will help strengthen existing food safety legislation.

Central to the Pennington Report are the recommendations to license butchers who are handling raw and cooked meat to ensure adequate separation. The Government are actively considering the detail of these proposals and will shortly seek views from health professionals, consumer organisations and the trade on issues such as the premises to be covered, the degree of physical separation and on timescale for implementation. Final decisions on all these matters will have as its overriding concern the protection of public health.

The Government will also promote the introduction of Hazard Analysis and Critical Control Point (HACCP) principles into the meat production chain, from slaughterhouse to butcher shop. This internationally recognised approach to identifying and controlling food hazards will secure improved levels of food safety in the longer term.

As Professor Pennington has recognised, many of the recommendations will require careful development to ensure that they are effective when introduced. At the same time we are fully aware of the need to have the measures in place quickly to strengthen food safety and restore public confidence, particularly given the recent new outbreaks of E.coli in Scotland.

Finally, the Government wish formally to record its appreciation of the work carried out by Professor Pennington and the members of the expert group. Our acceptance of all the Group's recommendations illustrates our commitment that the safety of public health will be of the highest priority.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Closed Circuit Television (Chelmsford)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the impact of the introduction of CCTV on the crime level in the centre of Chelmsford; how many arrests have been made as a result of CCTV; and by how much the crime rate has fallen in that part of Chelmsford. [2251]

Mr. Michael: The police in Chelmsford report that, in the 12-month period since the cameras became operational (January 1996–January 1997), 200 arrests were directly attributed to the presence of the cameras, and town centre crime overall fell by 21 per cent.

Departmental Documents

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage and how many documents in 1996 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of, and (g) otherwise unaccounted for. [2513]

Mr. Straw: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department today.

Puppy Farms

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to increase animal welfare standards in puppy farms; and if he will make a statement. [2989]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government is giving careful consideration to the laws regulating dog breeding establishments.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of asylum seekers held (a) in gaol and (b) otherwise in custody on the first day of each month for the years (i) 1994, (ii) 1995, (iii) 1996 and (iv) 1997 to date. [2845]

Immigration (Same Sex Partnerships)

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will put on hold all immigration appeal cases for established same sex partnerships, pending a review of immigration policy. [3052]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No. Home Office Presenting Officers have, however, been instructed not to oppose requests for adjournments in same sex relationship appeals unless there are strong reasons on other grounds for proceeding with the case.

CS Gas

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to review the use of CS gas by the police; and if he will make a statement; [2138]

(2) what research his Department has commissioned into the effects of CS gas; and if he will make a statement; [2136]

(3) if he will make a statement on the regulations governing the use of CS gas by the police. [2137]

Mr. Michael: My right hon. Friend has no plans to review police use of CS at this stage. In 1969, the then Home Secretary, my noble Friend Lord Callaghan, set up an inquiry into the medical and toxicological aspects of CS following its use in Londonderry. The report of the inquiry was published, in two parts, in 1969 and 1971 (Cm 4173 and Cm 4775 respectively). The possible use of CS cartridges and grenades by police forces as a last resort in dealing with serious disorder is the subject of confidential Home Office guidelines. The Home Office Police Scientific Development Branch reviewed all the available scientific data relating to CS which, along with advice from the Chief Medical Officer and the Ministry of Defence, was taken into account by the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) in deciding to recommend CS spray as an aerosol incapacitant for police defensive use. ACPO has provided chief officers with guidance on the use of CS spray, copies of which are in the Library. The use of any force by officers is governed by section 3 of the Criminal Law Act 1967, which provides that a person may use such force as is reasonable in the circumstances in the prevention of crime.

Driving Without Insurance (Fines)

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average fine imposed by (a) justices of the peace and (b) stipendiary and metropolitan stipendiary magistrates in relation to cases of driving with no insurance in each of the last three years. [2939]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 10 June 1997]: The information collected centrally does not allow a distinction to be made between the types of magistrates who deal with a case.

However, the following table shows the average fine imposed by all magistrates' courts for driving uninsured against third party risks in England and Wales in the years 1993, 1994 and 1995. Figures for 1996 are not yet available. It also shows separately figures for metropolitan police forces, where stipendiary and metropolitan stipendiary magistrates are most likely to operate, and other police forces. Those fined for driving without insurance are often dealt with for other offences as well. It is difficult to know whether there is a significant difference in the case profiles of offenders dealt with by courts in different areas.

Animal Experimentation

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are to be taken to ensure proper observance of the regulations introduced under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. [3005]

Mr. George Howarth: The Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 remains one of the most rigorous pieces of legislation of its type. All those who work under the Act have a duty to ensure that its regulations, including the terms and conditions of the relevant licences and certificates, are fully observed. The holders of Certificates of Designation have a particular responsibility to ensure that animal work within their establishments is properly controlled.

The Home Office, through the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate, carries out spot checks on establishments to monitor compliance with the regulations, but inspectors cannot be at establishments at all times and observance of the law must lie primarily with the scientists and animal technicians.

James Hanratty

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to issue a pardon for James Hanratty. [2815]

Mr. Michael: My right hon. Friend has no current plans to issue a pardon for James Hanratty. Representations on the case of James Hanratty have been passed to the Criminal Cases Review Commission for its consideration and it will be for it to decide if the case should be referred to the Court of Appeal.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he proposes to increase the percentage of (a) persons aged over 18 years, (b) people from ethnic minority backgrounds and (c) people in rented accommodation who are registered to vote. [3073]

Mr. George Howarth: We are considering how best to publicise this autumn's canvass for electoral registration and in particular how to reach groups whose members tend to be more likely not to register. These include the young, members of ethnic minority groups and people who are not in settled accommodation.

Entry Clearance Refusals (Appeals)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average cost to public funds in the last year for which figures are available of an appeal to an adjudicator against a decision by an entry clearance officer to refuse family settlement to an applicant, from the time of the refusal to the issue of a determination by the adjudicator. [2531]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is not held centrally, but I will write to the hon. Member.

TREASURY

Departmental Documents

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage and how many documents in 1996 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of, and (g) otherwise unaccounted for. [2510]

Mrs. Liddell: No document falls due for transfer to the Public Record Office until it is 30 years old. The suitability of a document for selection for permanent preservation under the terms of the Public Records Act 1958 will be reviewed during that period. The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested. To do so would incur disproportionate cost. However, in order to comply with their duties under the Act, Departments are obliged to make arrangements for the safe keeping of their records, with a view to their possible selection and transfer to the Public Record Office and eventual release to the public. The general arrangements for extended closure or retention of public records are set out in Chapter 9 of the White Paper on Open Government of July 1993 (Cm 2290).

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the Government's proposals for the future of the private finance initiative; and if he will make a statement. [2569]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: I have asked Malcolm Bates to conduct a rapid review of present arrangements. I have placed a copy of his terms of reference in the Library. Mr. Bates is due to report to me by 13 June, and I expect to announce the Government's response to the findings of that review shortly thereafter.

Terms of Reference

The purpose of the review, to be submitted to the Paymaster General by 13 June, is to make recommendations as to how best to accelerate the flow of sound PFI (Public/Private Partnership) projects. Taking as its starting point the 12 point plan for partnership, published originally in Labour's Business Manifesto, it will address in particular:

(i) The role that can best be played by a new public/private taskforce within the Treasury, reporting to the Paymaster General.

(ii) The respective roles and effectiveness of the Private Finance Panel, the Executive to the Private Finance Panel and the departmental officials active in advancing partnership projects across the public sector.

(iii) Generic obstacles to progress and recommendations for their removal in ways that maintain value for money as the litmus test for what is acceptable and what is not.

(iv) The extent to which a lack of skills in the public and private sectors is a barrier to progress and what could best address that.

(v) How best to learn the lessons of success (and failure) so that public and private sector practitioners do not constantly reinvent wheels.

Building Societies

Ms Keeble: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about Government policy on mutuality, with special reference to the Nationwide Building Society; and what assessment he has made of the possible impact on homeowners of building societies converting into banks. [2981]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government welcomes diversity and competition in the mortgage market, where both the mutual building societies and plc banks provide a range of varied and innovative products.

As only one building society has converted to a bank before this year, it is too early to say what the impact on homeowners will be.

Ms Drown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the long term impact (a) on interest rates for homeowners and savers and (b) on choice of lending and saving institutions, of mutual building societies converting into banks. [2985]

Mrs. Liddell: As all but one of the societies converting to banks are either about to do so, or have done so very recently, it is too early to say what the long term impact on interest rates for homeowners and savers will be.

The Government welcomes diversity and competition amongst lending and saving institutions, whatever their constitution.

Christian Aid: Change the Rules Campaign

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many individual contributions of £1 coins the Treasury has received in the last 12 months from supporters of Christian Aid's Change the Rules campaign; and what he proposes to do with the sum contributed. [2837]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 10 June 1997]: The Government has received a total of £3,624.67 as of 10 June. All the money received as part of the £1 coin campaign is being paid into the Consolidated Fund at the Bank of England and will be used to provide additional debt relief for Tanzania.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether NHS trust and health authority deficits, actual and projected, have been included in the public sector borrowing requirement calculation for (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98. [2207]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 6 June 1997]: Outturns for the public sector borrowing requirement in 1995–97 and 1996–97 cover the cash borrowing requirements of all public sector bodies, including NHS Trusts and health authorities. The forecast of the public sector borrowing requirement for 1997–98 made in the last Budget was based on the previous Government's spending plans. It included the planned borrowing of NHS trusts and assumed that health authorities' expenditure remained within their allocated cash limit.

Income Tax

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for a married taxpayer with earned income and no other income of (i) £5,000, (ii) £10,000, (iii) £15,000 and (iv) £20,000 and a single taxpayer with earned income and no other income of (a) £5,000, (b) £10,000 (c) £15,000 and (d) £20,000, how much they would gain each week from the introduction of a 10p starting rate of income tax on the first (1) £1,000, (2) £1,500, (3) £2,000, (4) £2,500 and (5) £3,000 of taxable income to replace the first £2,000 of the current 20p income tax band while leaving all other tax rate bands and allowances unchanged. [1859]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 2 June 1997]: Based on the right hon. Member's assumptions, the weekly gains from a new 10p starting rate of income tax are given in the table. 1997–98 allowances and rates are used.

Gain per week (£) Width of 10p band

Earnings	£1,000	£1,500	£2,000	£2,500	£3,000
£5,000	1.84	1.84	1.84	1.84	1.84
£10,000	1.92	2.88	3.85	4.81	5.77
£15,000	1.92	2.88	3.85	4.81	5.77
£20,000	1.92	2.88	3.85	4.81	5.77

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much reserve would be forgone by the introduction of a starting rate of income tax at 10p on the first (a) £1,000, (b) £1,500, (c) £2,000, (d) £2,500 and (e) £3,000 of taxable income to replace its first £1,000, £1,500, £2,000, £2,500, £3,000 respectively, of its current 20p income tax band, while leaving all other tax rate bands and allowances unchanged. [1860]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 2 June 1997]: The estimated full-year costs, based on the right hon. Member's assumptions and assuming that all other allowances and tax rates in 1997–98 are left unchanged, are given in the table:

New 10p starting rate on first	Full year cost at 1997–98 income levels (£ billion)
£1,000	2.5
£1,500	3.6
£2,000	4.8
£2,500	5.9
£3,000	6.9

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer with a starting rate of income tax at 10p on respectively the first £1,000, £1,500 to £2,000; £2,500, £3,000 of taxable income replacing the first £1,000, £1,500, £2,000, £2,500 and £3,000 of the current 20p income tax band, at what starting point of taxable income the basic rate would have to be set to ensure no overall loss of tax receipts either in the year of assessment for which these changes were made or in either of two following years. [1875]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 2 June 1997]: Based on the right hon. Member's assumption of no loss of tax revenue in a full year, the basic rate limit would need to be set at the levels given in the table. These assume 1997–98 income levels and that all other allowances and tax rates in 1997–98 are unchanged.

New 10p starting rate on first	Value of basic rate limit
£1,000	£21,100
£1,500	£19,400
£2,000	£18,000
£2,500	£16,850
£3,000	£15,850

To repeat the same analysis in terms of no overall loss of tax receipts in 1997–98 and the following two years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much the basic rate limit would have to be reduced to ensure that with a starting rate of tax of 10p on the first (a) £1,000, (b) £1,500, (c) £2,000, (d) £2,500 and (e) £3,000 of taxable income to replace the first £1,000, £1,500, £2,000, £2,500 and £3,000 respectively, of the current 20p income tax band, while leaving all other tax rate bands and allowances unchanged, nobody currently paying tax at the higher rate of 40p would experience any reduction in their aggregate income tax liability. [1858]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 2 June 1997]: Based on the right hon. Member's assumptions that the higher rate taxpayers do not gain from a new 10p starting rate, the basic rate limit would be as shown in the table below.

Width of 10p band	Reduce basic rate limit to
(a) £1,000	£25,512
(b) £1,500	£25,218
(c) £2,000	£24,924
(d) £2,500	£24,629
(e) £3,000	£24,335

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the cost of mortgage interest tax relief in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000. [1642]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 2 June 1997]: The estimated total cost of mortgage interest tax relief in 1997–98 is £2.4 billion. The estimate is based on the assumption, by convention, of no change from the latest available estimated average building society interest rate of 6.66 per cent. The cost of the relief in 1998–99 and 1999–2000 would depend on future interest rates, the future distribution of the number and value of outstanding mortgages.

Finance Bill

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he plans to publish the Finance Bill; and when he will make notes on the Bill's clauses available to hon. Members. [3506]

Mr. Gordon Brown: We expect the Finance Bill to be published the day after the conclusion of the Budget debate. Explanatory Notes on the Bill's clauses will be placed in the Vote Office and the Libraries of the House that day. Members of the public will be able to obtain copies of the Explanatory Notes from the Treasury; these will also be available on the Treasury's internet site (http://www.hm-treasury.gov.uk).

Customs and Excise (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures are in place to monitor and enforce fair employment and equal opportunities policies in Customs and Excise in Northern Ireland. [1912]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 6 June 1997]: Customs and Excise, along with all other civil service departments and agencies with staff in Northern Ireland, submit an annual return via the Cabinet Office to the Fair Employment Commission. This covers the perceived religious composition of the workforce in Northern Ireland and those who apply for vacancies.

Customs also undertakes a full review of its policies and procedure relating to equality of opportunity in employment in Northern Ireland for the Fair Employment Commission every three years. The last such review was in 1996.

Individual personnel systems, such as appointments, personal appraisal, pay and grading and training and development opportunities are monitored in respect of community background for Northern Ireland, taking account of the Codes of Practice from the Fair Employment Commission and the Equal Opportunities Commission.

As a matter of policy all Customs staff in Northern Ireland are receiving equal opportunities training.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been (a) the rate of and (b) the revenue raised through capital gains tax in each financial year since 1987–88. [2791]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 9 June 1997]: Figures on receipts are shown in Table 1.2 and rates of capital gains tax in Appendices A.5 and A.2 of the Inland Revenue Statistics 1996, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information his Department has obtained concerning capital gains tax rates, thresholds and tapers in each of the other member countries of the European Union; and if he will make a statement. [2795]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 9 June 1997]: The taxation of capital, including capital gains, varies widely between different member States.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been (a) the rate of and (b) the revenue raised through inheritance tax in each financial year since 1987–88. [2792]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 9 June 1997]: Figures on receipts are shown in Table 1.2 and rates of inheritance tax in Appendix A.6 of Inland Revenue Statistics 1996, a copy of which is in the Library.

Economic Policy

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review the relationships between capital gains and inheritance tax rates, investment decisions and Exchequer revenues in advance of the Budget. [2794]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 9 June 1997]: This is a matter for the Chancellor in considering his Budget.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Departmental Documents

Mr. Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the number of documents passed to the Public Record Office in 1996 from all Government departments. [2504]

Mr. Hoon: The Question concerns a specific operational matter on which the Chief Executive of the Public Record Office is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the Chief Executive to reply direct.

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mr. Norman Baker, dated 10 June 1997:

I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply for the Public Record Office to your question about the above.

103,997 documents were passed to the Office in 1996.

A "document" is an archival unit, usually comprising a file, a volume or a bundle of papers rather than an individual sheet of paper.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department of the documents passed to the Public Record Office from all Government departments in 1965 what percentage he estimates have been (a) released under the 30-year rule in their entirety, (b) released under the 30-year rule in part only, (c) retained with a specific future date identified for release into the public domain, (d) retained with no specific future date identified for release into the public domain, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of and (g) otherwise unaccounted for; and what is the total of (a) to (g) as a percentage of all those documents passed to the Public Record Office in 1965. [2505]

Mr. Hoon: The Question concerns a specific operational matter on which the Chief Executive of the Public Record Office is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the Chief Executive to reply direct.

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mr. Norman Baker, dated 10 June 1997:

I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply for the Public Record Office to your question about the above.

Regarding (a) and (b), records passed to this Office in 1965 were subject to a fifty year rule. The thirty year rule came into force in 1968, under the Public Records Act 1967.

Regarding (c) and (d), records passed to this Office could not as the same time have been 'retained' by government departments. Retentions were for specified periods, which were renewable.

Regarding (e), 44 Cause Books of the Chancery Division of the Supreme Court (J 12), dating from 1939, were destroyed in 1972, following the recommendations of the Committee on Legal Records in 1966 (Cmnd 3084). In addition, items from among the War Office, Registered Papers, General Series (WO 32), dating from 1855 to 1925, were destroyed in 1967 following a re-review of the contents of the class, as were a small number of items from the War Office reports and Miscellaneous Papers (WO 33), dating between 1925 and 1930, in 1968.

Regarding (f) and (g), no records passed to this Office in 1965 have been disposed of otherwise than by destruction, or are otherwise unaccounted for.

Details of the records transferred to the Public Record Office in 1965 appear as appendix II to the Report of the Keeper of Public Records for that year, laid before Parliament in 1966.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage and how many documents in 1996 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of, and (g) otherwise unaccounted for. [2508]

Mr. Hoon: No document falls due for transfer to the Public Record Office until it is 30 years old. The suitability of a document for selection for permanent preservation under the terms of the Public Records Act 1958 will be reviewed during that period. The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested. To do so would incur disproportionate cost. However, in order to comply with their duties under the Act, departments are obliged to make arrangements for the safekeeping of their records, with a view to their possible selection and transfer to the Public Record Office and eventual release to the public. The general arrangements for extended closure or retention of public records are set out in Chapter 9 of the White Paper Open Government of July 1993 (Cm 2290).

Civil Legal Aid

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans the Government have to extend the eligibility for civil legal aid to hearing before (a) industrial tribunals and (b) social security appeal tribunals; and if he will make a statement. [2843]

Mr. Hoon: There are no immediate plans to increase the scope of the legal aid scheme. There is to be a review of civil justice and legal aid and we will be able to consider the current scope of the scheme in the light of the outcome of that review.

Legal Services Ombudsman

Mr. Amess: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to review in the public interest the effectiveness of the self-regulatory Office for the Supervision of Solicitors and the powers of the Legal Services Ombudsman. [2220]

Mr. Hoon: The effectiveness of the Office for the Supervision of Solicitors is, in the first instance, a matter for the Law Society. My Department intends later this year to carry out the first review of the office of the Legal Services Ombudsman since it was established at the beginning of 1991.

Abbas Gokal

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will call for a report from the Legal Aid Board into the case of Abbas Gokal. [1913]

Mr. Hoon: It is the courts not the Legal Aid Board that consider applications for legal aid in criminal cases. The Central Criminal Court granted legal aid in the case of Mr. Gokal. I obtained a report from the court about Mr. Gokal's application for legal aid in the light of the publicity following the jury's verdict in the case. I have since asked the Administrator at the court to review the court's procedures in relation to legal aid. I have also asked for all Crown Court centres to be alerted to the need for great care in the processing of applications for legal aid.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Minimum Wage

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what research has been commissioned and what estimates have been made by his Department, and what information presented to him, regarding the costs per annum to his Department's budget of the introduction of a minimum wage at (a) £3.50 an hour, (b) £4 an hour and (c) £4.40 an hour; and if he will make a statement. [2108]

Mr. Tom Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 9 June 1997, Official Report, column 310.

Concessionary Television Licences

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) if he will change the rules of the television licence concessionary scheme for retired persons in sheltered complexes with wardens to enable the concession to continue once granted in circumstances where the warden's hours of work are reduced; [2883]

(2) if he will introduce a personal concession for retired persons in sheltered complexes of the kind granted in May 1988 to protect the television licence concessionary scheme for those in receipt of the concession at 1 January; [2884]

(3) what plans he has to extend the television licence concessionary scheme to retired residents in sheltered complexes with wardens working on site for 16 hours each week. [2882]

Mr. Fisher: Entitlement to the concessionary television licence fee is linked primarily to the accommodation occupied and the way in which it is provided or managed, rather than being a personal and portable benefit. The requirement for qualifying sheltered accommodation to have a carer who either lives within the scheme or works on site for at least 30 hours a week is designed to limit the scheme to sheltered housing directly comparable to a residential home. The Government has no current plans to amend the concessionary licence fee regulations.

Political and Special Advisers

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list (a) the name, (b) the salary, (c) the previous occupation and salary and (d) the terms and conditions of each political and special adviser in his Department; and what was the selection process used to appoint these persons. [2415]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 6 June 1997]: I have two Special Advisers, Mr. Julian Eccles and Mr. John Newbigin. Mr. Eccles was previously employed as an Associate Director with the Public Affairs Division of Hill and Knowlton. Mr. Newbigin, who works three and a half days a week for me, continues to work for Enigma Productions for one day and a half.

The terms and conditions of each appointment are set out in the draft model contract, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Special Advisers are paid within a range of £24,349 to £73,484. Their salaries are negotiated individually and are confidential within this range. Details of this and previous salary are not provided in order to protect the privacy of the individuals concerned.

These are personal appointments made by me following consultation with the Permanent Secretary of my Department and the Prime Minister.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Playing Fields

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement concerning the sale of school playing fields by local education authorities; and what plans he has to change present policy. [2145]

Mr. Alan Campbell: To aks the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to change Government policy regarding the sale of school playing fields. [3621]

Mr. Byers: We intend to make sure that those playing fields which schools and their local communities need are not sold in future.

My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Education and Employment and the Secretary of State for National Heritage are discussing this as a matter of urgency. We are looking at a wide range of options to ensure that all school pupils will have access to proper sports facilities.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many acres of playing fields and at what locations have been sold over the last 10 years by the Durham local education authority. [2462]

Mr. Byers: Local education authorities are not required to report their disposals of playing fields to Central Government.

Provided that their schools continue to comply with the requirements for minimum playing field area in the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1996, local education authorities may dispose of land belonging to them without reference to the Secretary of State. However, before considering any land as surplus, local authorities should consider carefully both future demand, from projected pupil numbers, and the needs of the wider communities that their schools serve.

As my hon. Friend is aware, the Sports Council has established a register of recreational land and the Government is considering how best to tackle the whole question of playing fields and sports provision for schools as a matter of urgency.

Secondary Schools

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils in each local education authority in England and Wales in each academic year from 1988–89 to 1996–97 who were educated in either grant-maintained or local education authority secondary schools came from outside the local authority area; and what percentage of the total school population that represents in each case. [2214]

Mr. Byers: The following table sets out the number of pupils aged 11–15 in each English local education authority who were educated in maintained schools and who came from outside the area of the local education authority in which they were educated. These numbers are expressed as a percentage of the total numbers of pupils aged 11–15 educated by the authorities. Data are available only for the academic years 1991–92 and 1993–94 and 1996–97.

1. The 1996–97 figures for Avon, Cleveland, Humberside and North Yorkshire represent the position prior to Local Government reorganisation.
2. The import figures are gross figures and not net of exports to other authorities. Hence the figures for England are not zero.
3. In some cases where no data were available, the 1996–97 figures have been estimated on the basis of previous returns.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list (a) capital projects in schools which have taken advantage of PFI and (b) planned and actual costs to public funds of each of these schemes over their lifetime; and if he will make a statement. [3020]

Mr. Byers: A number of schools PPP/PFI projects are being actively considered, and some are approaching contract signing stage. My right hon. Friend the Paymaster General is conducting a wide ranging review of PPP/PFI, and we plan to encourage the use of PPP/PFI to improve the condition of school buildings, in the light of the outcome of that review.

Dyslexia

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what provision is made by his Department to assist adults with dyslexia; [2446]

(2) what grants are available from his Department for adults with dyslexia; [2447]

(3) what steps he proposes to take to improve access to education and resources for adults with dyslexia; [2448]

(4) what plans he has to improve the funding available for adults with dyslexia. [2450]

Dr. Howells: The Department provides financial help to adults with dyslexia in a number of ways of which the following are among the most significant.

In higher education, dyslexic students, who are eligible for a mandatory award from their LEA, may qualify for one or more of the Disabled Student's Allowances available as part of their maintenance grant. The cost of these grants is met in full by my Department. The Department has also provided £28 million to further education colleges and universities for 1997–98 for Further and Higher Education Access Funds. These funds are available to students whose access to further and higher education might be inhibited by financial considerations or who, for whatever reason, including learning difficulties, face financial difficulties.

The Further and Higher Education Funding Councils make some funding available specifically in respect of provision for students with learning difficulties and/or disabilities, including dyslexia.

There are no current plans for the Department to make additional provision in this area.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what funds are available to local authorities to provide grants for adults with dyslexia. [2449]

Dr. Howells: The total education spending allowed for within the revenue support grant settlement for 1997–98 was £18,088 million. It is for individual local authorities to decide how to allocate the funding they receive between and within the services they provide, including whether to make grants available to adults with dyslexia.

Mature Students

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what estimate he has made of the average maintenance (a) grant and (b) loan awarded to mature students in each year of study; and if he will make a statement; [2749]

(2) what estimate he has made of the average maintenance (a) grant and (b) loan awarded to mature students in Wales, in each year of study; and if he will make a statement. [2736]

Dr. Howells: The available information on student awards does not identify separately those awards received by mature students. Information on the average student loan is not available in the form requested, either in the Department or in the Student Loans Company. However, the average loan to students aged 26 years and over at the start of their course in the academic year 1995–96 according to place of study is given in the table.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what estimate he has made of (a) how many and (b) what percentage of those studying for (i) undergraduate degrees and (ii) equivalent vocational qualifications are mature students; and if he will make a statement; [2746]

(2) if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on mature students. [2747]

Dr. Howells: There are no direct equivalences between undergraduate degrees and vocational qualifications. The table below provides an analysis by qualification aim of those studying at undergraduate level in HE institutions in England in 1996–97.

Undergraduate students in higher education establishments[1] in England 1996–97 (thousands)

[1] Excludes HE in FE establishments.

[2] Students aged 21 or over in the current academic year.

My right hon. Friend welcomes the substantial increase that has taken place in the number of mature students in higher education, to the point where the number of mature entrants now exceeds the number of 18–21 year olds starting in higher education. Our policy is to widen the opportunities for all individuals to enable them to fulfil their intellectual and personal potential and to engage in learning throughout life and we shall be considering very carefully the relevant recommendations of the National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education, which is expected to report next month.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what estimate he has made of (a) how many and (b) what percentage of mature students studying for (i) undergraduate degrees and (ii) equivalent vocational qualifications currently (1) are entitled to and (2) claim grants for (A) teaching fees and (B) maintenance, broken down into local authority areas; and if he will make a statement; [2748]

(2) what estimate he has made of (a) how many and (b) what percentage of mature students studying for (i) undergraduate degrees and (ii) equivalent vocational qualifications in Wales currently (1) are entitled to and (2) claim grants for (A) teaching fees and (B) maintenance, broken down into local authority areas; and if he will make a statement. [2735]

Dr. Howells: The information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what estimate he has made of the average amount owed by further education (a) students and (b) mature students in Wales to (i) the Student Loans Company and (ii) personal banks as a result of and at the end of their period of study, broken down into local authority areas; and if he will make a statement; [2737]

(2) what estimate he has made of the average amount owed by further education (a) students and (b) mature students to (i) the Student Loans Company and (ii) personal banks as a result of, and at the end of, their period of study, broken down into local authority areas; and if he will make a statement. [2750]

Dr. Howells: Information on student indebtedness to banks is not collected centrally. I have asked the Chief Executive of the Student Loans Company to write to the hon. Member about average debt to the Student Loans Company at 31 March 1997.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to publish a timetable for (a) the removal of the differences in funding between grant-maintained and local education authority schools, (b) the removal of grant-maintained status, (c) transferring responsibility for planning of all school places to the local education authorities and (d) introducing legislation to reverse the Greenwich judgment; and if he will make a statement. [3028]

Mr. Byers: Our plans for schools will be set out in a White Paper which we shall be publishing shortly. That will be followed by legislation in the Autumn.

SSA Methodology

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the time scale for the publication of the current review of SSA methodology for 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [3034]

Mr. Byers: The review of the SSA methodology for 1998–99 is following broadly the same timetable as in previous years. Consultative meetings between central and local government representatives are taking place over the summer leading up to a report on options for possible SSA changes to be published in the autumn.

Standard Assessment Tasks

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to reduce the paperwork associated with the SATs; and if he will make a statement. [3030]

Ms Estelle Morris: We are determined to reduce the administrative load on teachers wherever possible. We have already combined the Department's separate annual consultations on assessment and reporting into a single consultation paper. And we are setting up a new Working Group to find ways of cutting bureaucratic burdens on teachers from whatever source.

Assisted Places

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the number of assisted places available in the (a) Birmingham, Yardley, (b) North Tyneside and (c) Sheffield, Brightside constituencies. [3079]

Mr. Byers: There are no schools participating in the assisted places scheme in any of the constituencies mentioned.

Class Sizes

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the average class size in each grant-maintained and LEA-controlled primary and secondary school, in the west Chelmsford constituency on 31 March, or the latest available date before that. [2252]

Mr. Byers: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) on 10 June 1997, Official Report, column 365 which explains the Department's present position on the publication of data for individual schools.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many classes of five, six and seven-year-olds in each local education authority had more than 30 children on 1 January 1997 based on returns from the All Schools Census; and what this figure is as a percentage of the total number of classes of five, six and seven-year-olds in each case. [3192]

Mr. Byers: Information on classes of five, six and seven-year-olds was not collected centrally.

Departmental Documents

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage and how many documents in 1996 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of, and (g) otherwise unaccounted for. [2511]

Dr. Howells: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Schengen Agreement

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to how many pages the full Schengen Agreement runs; and how many of these pages are not released for public perusal. [2008]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Schengen Agreement of 1985 consists of 11 pages, which are in the public domain. The Schengen Convention of 1990 consists of 81 pages, also in the pubic domain. In addition, we understand that there are a number of technical and operational documents relating to implementation of these agreements, which are not in the public domain.

Laos

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to discuss the issue of unexploded bombs in Laos with (a) the Laotian Government, (b) the American Government, (c) the UN and (d) other relief agencies. [2972]

Mr. Fatchett: We are in touch regularly with the United Nations, who co-ordinate international assistance towards unexploded ordinance projects with the Lao Government. We have contributed more than £600,000 through various relief agencies in the last two years. There are no immediate plans for direct discussions with the Lao or United States Governments.

Leghold Traps

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the EC Commission on the use of leghold traps in the importation of wild caught fur; and if he will make a statement. [3044]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Commission reported to the 2 June General Affairs Council on the negotiations with Canada and Russia to conclude a Framework Agreement on Humane Trapping Standards. A decision on the Framework Agreement will be taken by the 19–20 June Environment Council.

Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government will introduce the legislation necessary for the United Kingdom's ratification of the Comprehensive Test Ban treaty. [2722]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Legislation is being drafted and we hope to introduce it as soon as possible.

Departmental Documents

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage and how many documents in 1996 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of, and (g) otherwise unaccounted for. [2517]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: In 1996 records for 1965 held by this Department were due for transfer to the Public Record Office in accordance with the Public Records Acts of 1958 and 1967. Ninety-seven per cent. of those records selected for permanent preservation amounting to some 636 feet were opened to public scrutiny. Figures on the number of documents involved are not kept owing to the disproportionate cost of keeping such statistics. 1.5 per cent. of these records were released with parts blocked out and a further 1.5 per cent. were withheld in their entirety. All withheld documents will be re-reviewed at intervals of not less than 10 years and will be released when their sensitivity is judged to have passed. The criteria for release are set out in the White Paper on Open Government of July 1993 (Cmd 2290).

This Department generally selects records for permanent preservation when they are 27 years old. In 1996 402 feet of records were selected for permanent preservation and 2,743 feet were destroyed. This destruction rate of 85 per cent. was unusually high owing to the volume of duplicated material between the files of the Colonial, Commonwealth Relations and Foreign Office in that year. No records were otherwise disposed of and all were accounted for.

Nuclear Weapons Register

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the establishment of a nuclear weapons register as proposed by the German Foreign Minister in December 1993. [2716]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We will examine the contribution to our goal of the global elimination of nuclear weapons which might be made by proposals such as a nuclear arms register, particularly in the context of the Strategic Defence Review.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Jamaica, Trinidad and Belize

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what aid and other forms of assistance the Government plans to give to the Governments of (i) Jamaica, (ii) Trinidad and (iii) Belize in each of the next three years. [3045]

Clare Short: We will continue to provide bilateral assistance in the form of Technical Co-operation to Jamaica and Belize. Priority sectors are currently poverty alleviation, primary education, public sector modernisation and forestry projects.

We have no bilateral aid programme to Trinidad and Tobago.

Departmental Documents

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what percentage and how many documents in 1996 she estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of and (g) otherwise unaccounted for. [2521]

Clare Short: No document falls due for transfer to the Public Record Office until it is 30 years old. The suitability of a document for selection for permanent preservation under the terms of the Public Records Act 1958 will be reviewed during that period. The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested. To do so would incur disproportionate cost. However, in order to comply with their duties under the Act, departments are obliged to make arrangements for the safekeeping of their records, with a view to their possible selection and transfer to the Public Record Office and eventual release to the public. The general arrangements for extended closure or retention of public records are set out in Chapter 9 of the White Paper Open Government of July 1993 (CM.2290).

Laos

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance was given by Her Majesty's Government to the Laotian Government for clearance of unexploded bombs in each of the last three years. [2971]

Clare Short: We have not provided any bilateral support to the Laotian Government for the clearance of unexploded ordnance (UXO). However, we have contributed over £543,000 in 1995–96 through United Nations and British NGO programmes for UXO clearance and community awareness activities in Xieng Khouang province and capacity building for the newly formed Lao National UXO Programme. In 1996–97 we gave a further £148,000 to Xieng Khouang project.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received on the casualty rates arising from unexploded bombs in Laos; and if he will make a statement. [2970]

Clare Short: No official data are currently available on casualty rates from unexploded ordnance in Laos.

PRIME MINISTER

Economic and Monetary Union

19. Mr. Cash: To ask the Prime Minister if he will put the protocol on the third stage of economic and monetary union and the issue of the single currency on the agenda of the intergovernmental conference at Amsterdam. [1425]

The Prime Minister: Economic and Monetary Union (EMU) is not on the IGC agenda. The Government has no intention of reopening the protocol which protects our right to choose whether or not to join the third stage of EMU.

Trustees

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will arrange for (a) Lord Nolan's Committee on standards in Public Life and (b) the political and public honours scrutineers to be advised by the trustees of the funds that provided help in opposition to him and to other ministers, of the sources of those funds. [1706]

The Prime Minister: The Leader of the Opposition's Office Fund was set up in accordance with guidelines discussed and agreed with Sir Gordon Downey.

The fund was set up as a blind trust to prevent me being aware of the sources of the contributions to it. But the practice established in Opposition whereby the Chief Whip consults the trustees of the fund when he is preparing the information needed by the Political Honours Scrutiny Committee, will continue. If an individual recommended for such an honour has been a contributor to the Leader of the Opposition's Office Fund, that information will be made available to the PHSC.

G7 Economic Summit, Denver

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what matters with regards to the environment he plans to raise at the G7 meeting in Denver. [2874]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 10 June 1997]: I shall be pressing for strong action on climate change, where the Government has already given a firm lead to the rest of the world through our commitment to reduce CO_2 emissions by 20 per cent. by 2010. I shall also be looking for practical measures to reduce pollution, help sustain our oceans, and supporting a new convention on the world's forests.

Political Appointees

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Prime Minister which political appointees since 1 May have been given executive authority over civil servants. [2852]

The Prime Minister: Two. Alastair Campbell as my Press Secretary, and Jonathan Powell as my Chief of Staff. On the terms of their appointments, I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Sevenoaks (Mr. Fallon) on 2 June, Official Report, column 96.

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister for what reasons the responsibilities of the previous Deputy Prime Minister in respect of the implementation and presentation of Government policy have been allocated to the Minister without Portfolio. [2836]

The Prime Minister [holding reply Tuesday 10 June]: I cannot answer for the last Government's arrangements. As regards the role of the Minister without Portfolio, I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Worthing, West (Mr. Bottomley) on 3 June, Official Report, column 134.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Departmental Documents

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage and how many documents in 1996 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of, and (g) otherwise unaccounted for. [2507]

Dr. David Clark: No document falls due for transfer to the Public Record Office until it is 30 years old. The suitability of a document for selection for permanent preservation under the terms of the Public Records Act 1958 will be reviewed during that period. The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested. To do so would incur disproportionate cost. However, in order to comply with their duties under the Act, departments are obliged to make arrangements for the safekeeping of their records, with a view to their possible selection and possible transfer to the Pubic Record Office and eventual release to the public. The general arrangements for extended closure or retention of public records are set out in Chapter 9 of the White Paper on Open Government of July 1993 (Cmnd. 2290).

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Aid

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals she has to transfer to Wales and Scotland (a) powers to award or remove assisted area status and (b) powers to vary the system of selective regional aid; and if she will make a statement. [2935]

Mrs. Roche: The Government's proposals on the powers to be exercised by the new Welsh Assembly and Scottish Parliament in respect of regional assistance will be set out in White Papers to be published before the House rises for the Summer recess.

Radioactive Wastes

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the public financial liability for the long-term management of radioactive wastes, including plutonium, arising from the current and historical operations of British Energy. [1782]

Mr. Battle: British Energy is responsible for meeting all the liabilities associated with its assets. There is no public liability for British Energy's current or historical operations. These liabilities will be financed by British Energy out of its own earnings and cashflow or through a segregated fund. The recently concluded contract for future AGR supplies potentially involves BNFL taking on liability for some of the waste arising from AGR reprocessing although the terms and value of the contract fully reflect this option.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment her Department has made of Professor Carlo Rubbia's proposals for a prototype 10 megawatt nuclear waste burning reactor. [2245]

Mr. Battle: The Department is aware of the proposals of Professor Carlo Rubbia for the development of a nuclear waste burning reactor, generally known as an energy amplifier. The Euratom Scientific and Technical Committee, which has members from all the member states of the EU, has reported to the European Commission on the proposals, and the report will be published shortly. The conclusions, with which my Department concurs, are that it is unrealistic, on the grounds of both cost and technical risk, to pursue the whole system at once, but that there are several aspects which may merit further work at this stage.

MOX Fuel

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to use MOX fuel in United Kingdom reactors. [1799]

Mr. Battle: A decision to use MOX fuel in United Kingdom reactors is a matter for the operators, concerned, British Energy, subject to meeting the necessary regulatory requirements.

Electricity Standing Charges

Mr. Stunell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will bring forward proposals to repeal section 18(3)(a) of the Electricity Act 1989; and if she will make a statement. [2931]

Mr. Battle: I have no current plans to repeal section 18(3)(a) of the Electricity Act 1989 which allows Public Electricity Suppliers to levy standing charges. I will, however, continue to examine ways to reduce fuel poverty.

Overseas Aid

Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance her Department is proposing to provide to the Governments of (i) Jamaica, (ii) Trinidad Tobago and (iii) Belize over the next three years; and what assistance in each case is currently provided. [3042]

Mrs. Roche: My Department provides advice and assistance to British companies interested in trade and investment in Jamaica, Trinidad Tobago and Belize. We do not provide assistance to the governments of those countries, nor do we have any plans to do so.

British Steel

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has made to the United States Government to secure the withdrawal of the anti-dumping tariff imposed on British Steel on 30 November 1992. [2266]

Mrs. Roche: Exports to the United States of various British Steel products are subject to anti-dumping and countervailing duties. HM Government and the European Commission have made repeated representations to the US authorities on these cases. DTI has maintained close contact with British Steel on the cases, some of which are the subject of continuing legal action in the US courts. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade will be ready to make further representations if that is likely to help settle the matter.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she intends to review the allocation of assisted area status in Britain. [2476]

Mrs. Roche: The Government is considering whether a Review of the Assisted Area Map is necessary and will carry out a review as needed. I will announce the extent and nature of any review when we have looked at this issue.

Aerospace Industry

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the restrictions on foreign ownership of shares in (a) British Aerospace and (b) Rolls-Royce. [2184]

Mr. Battle: At the time of the privatisations of British Aerospace (1985) and Rolls-Royce (1987), the Government imposed a foreign shareholding limit on both companies. Since 1989, that limit has been set at 29.5 per cent.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the payments by the United Kingdom Government to (a) British Aerospace and (b) Rolls-Royce in each of the last five years, indicating in each case the reasons for the payments. [2185]

Mr. Battle: The payments made by my Department to British Aerospace and Rolls Royce in the last five years were as follows.

Launch aid

£ thousand

	BAe		RR
	Payments	Repayments	Payments	Repayments
1992–93	28,600	40,900	0	22,700
1993–94	0	29,400	0	16,600
1994–95	0	19,200	0	19,500
1995–96	0	29,300	0	13,200
1996–97	0	42,710	0	23,600

Launch aid is a repayable but risk-sharing Government investment in specific projects for the design and development of civil aircraft, helicopters and aeroengines in the UK. If the project proves successful HMG will receive repayment of its contribution plus a real rate of return.

Civil aircraft research and demonstration (CARAD)

	BAe	RR
1992–93	1,749	*4,352
1993–94	1,539	*4,790
1994–95	1,361	5,402
1995–96	2,631	6,075
1996–97	2,224	4,609

CARAD ensures that essential aircraft technologies are available in the long term through an integrated national programme of research. It supports basic and applied pre-competitive research and technology demonstration. (Some of these payments are for extramural research managed by the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency and will include amounts paid by Rolls-Royce and British Aerospace to other research collaborators. An asterisk denotes estimated payments under the extramural programme managed by the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency.)

Innovation and technology support

	BAe	RR
1992–93	733	470
1993–94	436	442
1994–95	308	647
1995–96	271	307
1996–97	93	163

These programmes encourage UK firms to undertake research and development in collaboration with others, including European partners and academia.

Other Departments, including MoD, may have made payments to these companies; this information is not held by my Department.

Life Forms Patents

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her policy on the patenting of life forms. [2844]

Mr. Battle: Apart from the exclusion of plant and animal varieties from patentability, current United Kingdom patent law permits the patenting of life forms.

Such inventions are considered against the same general criteria of novelty, inventive step and industrial applicability applied to all fields of technology.

Royal Greenwich Observatory

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to transfer the functions undertaken at the Royal Greenwich Observatory from their present location. [2570]

Mr. Battle: The Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council (PPARC) discussed the future of the Royal Greenwich Observatory and the Royal Observatory Edinburgh at its meeting on 21 May. I am now considering its advice with a view to an announcement as soon as possible.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

ENVIRONMENT AND THE REGIONS

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to invite bids for the next round of the Single Regeneration Budget. [1814]

Angela Eagle: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning to his question on 22 May 1997, Official Report, column 152, which dealt with arrangements for Round 4 of the Single Regeneration Budget Challenge Fund. We would like to see a more strategic approach to regeneration initiatives which encourages innovative local partnerships whilst directing resources to where they are needed most. Future arrangements for the Single Regeneration Budget Challenge Fund will therefore be subject to the outcome of the comprehensive review of regeneration policies announced by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister on 3 June.

Challenge Funds

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received in respect of a review of the single regeneration budget challenge funds; and if he will make a statement. [2150]

Angela Eagle: Many organisations involved in the Single Regeneration Budget Challenge Fund have asked about the Government's future intentions towards this scheme. There is a clear desire for a more strategic approach to regeneration initiatives and for a system which responds to need whilst keeping the innovation that was the result of the competitive process. In addition, therefore, to the interim arrangements which we have already announced for Round 4, my right hon Friend the Deputy Prime Minister announced on 3 June a comprehensive review of the Government's regeneration policies, which will include a review of the SRB Challenge Fund.

HFC 134

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he is taking to restrict the use of the gas HFC-134. [2083]

Angela Eagle: HFC–134a and other HFCs are greenhouse gases but do not damage the ozone layer. They have an important role to play in phasing out the use of ozone depleting substances controlled under the Montreal Protocol. The Government fully supports the concept of minimising emissions of HFCs and has voluntary agreements with the refrigeration, foam, fire, aerosols and vehicle air conditioning sectors to do so. Whilst the Government recognises that the responsible use of HFCs as replacements for ozone depleting substances can be justified, it is unlikely to be convinced that any new emissive applications of HFCs are necessary. Recent reports of plans to market self-chilling drinks cans, which would use and emit HFC–134a, are a very worrying development and the Government is urgently considering what action should be taken.

Water Companies

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he plans to take to ensure that, in seeking to avoid hosepipe bans, water companies take account of the implications for aquifer resources; and if he will make a statement. [2788]

Angela Eagle: Abstractions by water companies from aquifers and surface water sources have to comply with the maximum quantity and any other operational conditions specified in the licence for each abstraction. The Environment Agency has made plain that it will expect water companies to have in place a full range of demand management measures, including the imposition of hosepipe bans, before applying for variations in abstraction licence conditions under drought orders or permits.

The Government announced on 19 May 1997 its intention to review the water abstraction licensing system, and to introduce legislation requiring each water company to agree a detailed publicly available drought contingency plan with the Environment Agency.

Watercraft

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment he has made of the impact of personal watercraft on wildlife and the marine environment; [2663]

(2) what plans he has to take action against personal watercraft. [2664]

Angela Eagle: No assessment of the impact of personal watercraft on wildlife and the marine environment has been made by the Department.

Section 76 of the Public Health Act 1961 already provides for local authorities to make byelaws to regulate seaside pleasure boats for the prevention of danger, obstruction or annoyance to persons bathing in the sea or using the seashore. It is likely that personal watercraft can be regulated as pleasure boats under this Act, although a definitive interpretation is a matter for the courts.

My Department is leading an Inter-Departmental Working Party which is undertaking a review of byelaw powers for the coast. A discussion document issued in December 1996 identified coastal recreation management as a major issue. The many responses to this document are being analysed. The Working Party will meet again towards the end of the year to consider this analysis and agree an appropriate way forward.

Plutonium Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Truro of 2 June, Official Report, column 48, if he will list (a) the authors, (b) the date commissioned and (c) the expected completion date of the report on the disposal of high-level radioactive waste and spent fuel. [2751]

Angela Eagle: The study into research strategies for the disposal of high-level radioactive waste and spent nuclear fuel follows from a commitment given in the previous Government's White Paper "Review of Radioactive Waste Management Policy. Final Conclusions" (Cm 2919). QuantiSci Limited was appointed to undertake the work in March of this year following competitive tendering. The scheduled completion date for its work is April 1999.

Endangered Species

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) arrests, (b) prosecutions and (c) convictions for breach of the Endangered Species (Import and Export) Act 1976 have taken place in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [2701]

Angela Eagle: The 1976 Act originally implemented the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES) in the UK. In 1984, however, it was largely superseded by EC legislation, which implemented CITES throughout the European Community. The 1984 legislation has recently been replaced by revised EC Regulations which came into force on 1 June 1997.

There is no central record of arrests, prosecutions or convictions for CITES offences. However, we are aware that since May 1996 at least 15 cases have been brought under CITES legislation, including one which resulted in a conviction. Of the remaining 14 cases, three have led to a formal caution and 11 are awaiting trial. No cases have been brought under the Endangered Species (Import and Export) Act itself.

Bathing Water Quality

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on viral monitoring of sea water in respect of bathing water quality; and what are (a) the testing frequency requirements, (b) the types of viruses tested for and (c) the arrangements for publication of results. [2849]

Angela Eagle: My Department's policy is governed by the EC Directive on the quality of bathing water. As stated in the Commission's Report on the quality of bathing water for the 1996 bathing season published last month, the United Kingdom is the only Member State to have organised an enterovirus monitoring programme. Concentrations of enteroviruses are checked at least twice in the season at bathing waters which failed the coliform bacteria standards in the previous season. The results for England and Wales are entered in the public register of the Environment Agency. The UK results are also published annually by my Department and are available in the Library.

Departmental Integration

Mrs. Ann Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress he has made in integrating the Department of the Environment and the Department of Transport. [3218]

Mr. Prescott: Significant progress had already been made in integrating the policies of the two Departments. To secure the maximum advantage from integration, and to simplify lines of responsibility, my right hon. Friend the Minister for Transport and I have concluded that the two Departments should now be merged into a single Department to be known as the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

This change will take place from Monday 16 June. Detailed decisions on organisational structures will not be taken before the end of September, and will be preceded by a process of review and consultation with staff and Trade Unions.

Building Regulations

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to extend Part M of the Building Regulations to ensure that all new residential dwellings are accessible for disabled people. [2308]

Mr. Raynsford: In January 1995 the Department of the Environment issued a consultation paper on extending Part M of the Building Regulations, covering access and facilities for disabled people, to dwellings. The analysis of the responses to the consultation is complete, and active consideration is now being given to issues identified in the responses. These issues include technical points raised and also the cost of some of the measures proposed.

Social Housing (Disabled People)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to ensure that social housing built or renovated under the release of capital receipts meets the access requirements of disabled people. [2309]

Mr. Raynsford: Social housing, however funded, will have to comply with the relevant requirements of the Building Regulations. At present Part M of the Building Regulations, covering access and facilities for disabled people, does not apply to dwellings, but active consideration is being given to extending Part M in the light of the consultation exercise initiated in 1995.

Departmental Documents

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage and how many documents in 1996 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of, and (g) otherwise unaccounted for. [2519]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department.

Regional Development

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how he proposes to implement his plans for regional development agencies in England; and if he will make a statement. [3158]

Mr. Caborn: We plan to bring forward legislation in the Autumn to create regional development agencies in England to improve regional economic competitiveness and to provide for effective, co-ordinated regional economic development. It is intended that the boundaries of Regional Development Agencies (RDAs) will be the same as the administrative areas of the Government Offices for the Regions, except that there will be a single RDA for the north-west region including Merseyside.

I am today beginning a series of regional tours to seek local views and to open a dialogue on how to take matters forward. The Government recognise that the English regions have different characteristics and different problems, and we do not wish to impose a single prescriptive model for the agencies. We want to ensure that the legislation allows each region to have arrangements which fit its particular circumstances, building on the work that many bodies are currently doing.

This morning I met representatives of the national organisations with a major interest in regional development, to outline my plans for touring the regions, to hear their views, and to encourage them to participate fully in the regional process.

As a means of focusing debate, I have produced a paper setting out the issues for discussion, and inviting any written views by 5 September. I have placed a copy of the paper in the Library.

TRANSPORT

Nuclear Fuel (Rail Transportation)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to conduct a safety review of the transport by rail of nuclear fuel flasks; and if he will make a statement. [2217]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The safety regulations of the transport of radioactive material by rail, including nuclear fuel, are reviewed on a regular basis to ensure that the safety record of this transport is maintained. There are no plans for a safety review at this time.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to ensure that the heavy goods vehicle driving test includes a test using a laden vehicle. [2645]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are looking very closely at training and testing learner lorry drivers on laden vehicles with a view to issuing a Consultation Paper. I will ensure that copies of such a Paper are put in the House Library and a personal copy is sent to my hon. Friend the Member for Crewe and Nantwich.

Boeing 737

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what further action his Department proposes to take following Boeing's instructions regarding defective rudders on Boeing 737s. [2653]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Under the terms of the Chicago Convention, the United States of America is responsible, as the state of design, for the continued airworthiness of Boeing 737 aircraft.

The US Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) published a notice of proposed rulemaking on modifications to the Boeing 737 in March. The FAA is currently reviewing comments on its proposals and is expected to publish its final rule shortly.

The CAA had no fundamental concerns with the proposals and will ensure that appropriate action is taken by operators of UK registered B737 aircraft to comply with the terms of whatever modifications are promulgated by the FAA.

Boeing 747

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action (a) his Department and (b) the CAA have taken to ensure that the technical problems associated with the fuel tanks on Boeing 747s have been addressed by operators based in the United Kingdom. [2662]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Safety regulation of UK registered aircraft is the statutory responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority (CAA).

Under International Civil Aviation Organisation rules, primary responsibility for promulgating information necessary to maintain the continued airworthiness of an aircraft type rests with the State of Design. In the case of the Boeing 747 the US Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) is the body responsible.

As a result of its investigation, the US National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) has made some interim safety recommendations to the FAA, which are intended to reduce the risks of explosions in partially empty fuel tanks. The FAA is publicly consulting industry and other interested parties and if it determines that mandatory corrective action is necessary, it will issue an Airworthiness Directive.

In addition, Boeing has recommended some precautionary fuel tank inspections which are being carried out by United Kingdom operators of 747s. These inspections are primarily intended to seek information on the condition of equipment in and around fuel tanks; they are not checking for the existence of specific identified problems.

If the FAA issues any Airworthiness Directive related to this issue, it is likely that the CAA will make it mandatory for UK operators.

Air Bags

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what work he intends to undertake on the dangers posed by air bags to children in rear-facing child seats. [2647]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department is very aware of this danger. The key factor is not research but ensuring that the public understand the hazard.

The wide media coverage of the hazard is especially welcome and I hope that it will continue. A poster by the motor industry, warnings contained in the Department's publication "Choosing Safety" and in the forthcoming editions of "Seat Belts and the Law" and "The Highway Code" should also help.

European legislation now requires manufacturers to fit a warning label to cars to alert motorists to the hazard. This is a minimum requirement, and I welcome any effort the car industry can make to improve the clarity of this warning.

We will continue to monitor the situation and press for whatever further action is appropriate.

Driving Examiners

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many approved driving examiners have been found to be operating in an unsatisfactory manner and have had their licence removed in the last five years. [2646]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In 1996–97 10 instructors were removed from the Register of Approved Driving Instructors because they were considered not to be "fit and proper" persons. A further 80 instructors were removed from the Register because they failed to meet the minimum acceptable standards of instructional ability when assessed by the Driving Standards Agency. The corresponding figures for 1995–96 were 12 and 75 respectively. Figures for the preceding years cannot be separately identified from those leaving the Register for reasons such as retirement.

London Underground (Wheelchair Users)

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions by what date the London Underground will be accessible to wheelchair users. [2998]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This is a matter for London Underground. However, as the Underground system was originally built with little regard to the needs of disabled people, and in view of the cost of rectifying this situation at over 270 stations, it is difficult to give a specific date for when the Underground will be fully accessible to all. London Underground's policy is to maintain and improve existing levels of access for disabled passengers where practicable and to incorporate improved accessibility into all new and rebuilt trains, new lines and extensions and station redevelopments. For example, the Jubilee Line Extension, when completed, will be fully accessible to wheelchair users.

Access to underground stations, as to other public transport stations and terminals, is covered by the provisions of Part III of the Disability Discrimination Act. There are specific provisions in the Part of the Act which deal with the removal of physical barriers to access where that is deemed reasonable. The Department for Education and Employment (which is responsible for that part of the Act) will be consulting on its proposals for its implementation.

Rail Regulation

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the relationship between the Government and the Rail Regulator. [2864]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Rail Regulator is currently independent of Government, working to statutory duties in the Railways Act 1993. We have made clear that we intend to establish more effective and accountable regulation by the Regulator; we are now reviewing the options.

A1

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the reported accidents on the A1 north of Newcastle to the Scottish border over the last three years. [2959]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The number of reported injury accidents over the last three years is shown in the following table:

Number of reported injury road accidents on the A1 North of Newcastle to the Scottish border: 1994–96

Accidents

Severity	1994	1995	1996
Fatal	0	1	2
Serious	16	9	16
Slight	29	52	51
All	45	62	69

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how much of the length of the A1 from the Gosforth Interchange to the Scottish border is dual carriageway; and how much consists of single carriageway constructed within the last 18 years; [2960]

(2) if the state of the A1 north of Newcastle to the Scottish border will form part of his strategy review of the trunk road programme. [2961]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 11 June 1997:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about the A1 north of Newcastle.

There is 34km of dual carriageway and 60km of single carriage way between the Gosforth Interchange and the Scottish border.

During the last 18 years the following single carriageway schemes have been completed providing, generally, 7.3m wide carriageway with marginal strips:

Scheme	Opened	Length of carriageway (£ million)
Warenford Bypass	1978–79	2.0
Felton Bypass	1981	4.9
Belford Bypass	1983	5.0
Berwick Bypass	1983	9.0
Alnwick Bypass Stage 2	1985	6.5

You asked also if the A1 north of Newcastle to the Scottish border will form part of the Secretary of State's Strategic Review. Ministers have yet to announce the terms of reference for the strategic review, which I understand will cover the whole roads programme.

HEALTH

Corticosteroids

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the expenditure on GP-prescribed corticosteroids in each health district in England expressed as a value per head of resident population in the last year for which figures are available. [1341]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Dental Services

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the level of wastage of qualified dentists from the general dental service in each of the last five years; what estimate he has made of the total costs of such wastage to the NHS budget; and if he will make a statement. [1891]

Mr. Milburn: We do not collect information on wastage. Dentists are independent contractors and as such are free to choose the amount of work they carry out for the National Health Service. Their level of commitment to the NHS may vary for a number of reasons driven by personal choice and circumstances, including part-time working, early retirement and varying balance between private and NHS work.

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates he has made, by value or volume of individual treatments, of the increased amounts of private dentistry undertaken by general dental practitioners. [1893]

Mr. Milburn: Private dental work is a matter for the dentist and the patient customer. There is no Government funding and no detailed information on private dental treatment is centrally collected.

Some gross earnings information on dentists is collected from the Inland Revenue survey, solely to inform the Doctors and Dentists Review Body recommendations on gross fees by giving information on dentists' expenses. This can be used to get a broad indication of the amount of other earnings by general dental service dentists. The latest data are for 1994–95, and indicate that there was an increase in the amount of earnings from sources outside the general dental service between 1992–93 and 1994–95.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how long a national health service dental patient may remain on a dentist's patient list without seeking treatment; and if he will make a statement. [1917]

Mr. Milburn: This area is under review. The registration periods were changed with effect from last September and now stand at 15 months for adults and children.

The continuing care arrangement between the dentist and patient is normally rolled on for a further 15 months each time the patient attends that dentist. It is not necessary to receive treatment in order to extend the registration but if a patient does not attend, his or her registration will lapse. There is no charge for registering or re-registering with a dentist prepared to accept a patient.

Medical Insurance (Tax Relief)

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to (a) reduce and (b) remove the tax relief upon medical insurance premiums; and what consultations he has had with Treasury Ministers upon this subject. [2364]

Mr. Milburn: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Surrogacy

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the law on surrogacy; and if he will make a statement. [3622]

Ms Jowell: It is important that in an area as sensitive as surrogacy the law is kept under review in order to ensure that it continues to meet public concerns.

The legal position regarding surrogacy is clear:

surrogacy must not be commercialised; and surrogacy arrangements are unenforceable.

However, since this issue was last examined, the number of difficult cases which have attracted public attention has increased, although because so many arrangements are entirely private it is always difficult to make any assessment of the numbers of cases.

In view of current concern, UK health ministers have invited a small team with the relevant expertise to take stock and reassess the adequacy of existing law in this difficult area.

The Terms of Reference for the review are as follows:

to consider whether payments, including expenses, to surrogate mothers should continue to be allowed, and if so on what basis;

to examine whether there is a case for the regulation of surrogacy arrangements through a recognised body or bodies; and if so to advise on the scope and operation of such arrangements; in the light of the above to advise whether changes are needed to the Surrogacy Arrangements Act 1985 and/or section 30 of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990.

Margaret Brazier, Professor of Law at Manchester University, will lead the review. The other team members will be: Susan Golombok, who is Professor of Psychology at the City University, London; and Alastair Campbell, Professor of Ethnics in Medicine, University of Bristol.

We have specifically asked the review team to consider the issue within the context that surrogacy should not be commercialised and that any woman who has a baby as part of a surrogacy arrangement should not be compelled to give it up if she changes her mind. We also want to know whether there is, realistically, any practical way in which surrogacy arrangements could or should be regulated and if so how.

Mid Essex Hospital Trust

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for the most recent date for which figures are available the number of people in the Mid Essex Hospital Trust area awaiting non-emergency treatment (a) up to 12 months, (b) up to 18 months, (c) up to 24 months and (d) over 24 months. [2250]

Ms Jowell: The latest available information gives the position on 31 March 1997. On that date 6,164 patients were waiting for admission to Mid Essex Hospital Trust, on either an inpatient or day case basis, of whom 6,063 had been waiting less than 12 months and none of whom had been waiting more than 18 months.

Carers' Rights

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to issue guidance to general practitioners and primary health care teams about carers' rights under the Carers (Recognition and Services) Act 1995; [2310]

(2) what steps he intends to take to ensure that carers are informed of their rights under the Carers (Recognition and Services) Act 1995; [2311]

(3) what steps he intends to take to ensure that (a) carers receive written results of assessments carried out under the Carers (Recognition and Services) Act 1995 and (b) local authority staff are informed about carers' rights. [2312]

Mr. Boateng: The Department issued Policy Guidance and a Practice Guide on implementing the Act to social services departments, health authorities and National Health Service trusts in February 1996. The Guidance notes that general practitioners and other primary care staff are well placed to advise carers who are their patients of their assessment rights under the Act. The Guidance makes clear that social services departments should ensure that primary care staff have the relevant information to fulfil this role.

The Guidance also requires social services departments to ensure that their published information on community care tells carers about their rights under the Act. Information should be available to carers when they need it; it should be accessible to all members of the community and easy to understand.

It should also be part of routine assessment practice and, specifically, authorities are expected to inform carers who appear to be eligible under the Act of their right to request an assessment. Care plans and results of assessments should be confirmed in writing, or in a form which is accessible both to users and carers.

As part of our programme of research on community care, we are considering the impact of the Act. An inspection by the Social Services Inspectorate is also in preparation, which will look at how local authorities are implementing the Act.

Departmental Documents

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage and how many documents in 1996 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of, and (g) otherwise unaccounted for. [2509]

Mr. Boateng: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department gave today.

Neuroleptic Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning the overuse of neuroleptic drugs in residential homes for the elderly; and if he will make a statement. [2988]

Mr. Milburn: Some representations regarding possible overuse of drugs, although not specifically neuroleptics, in residential homes for the elderly have been received from members of the public. It is for the clinician to decide what treatment should be prescribed to best meet individual patients' medical needs.

Methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus Aureus

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of MRSA have been recorded in each health authority district in each of the last 12 months. [2983]

Ms Jowell: Information on the total number of cases of infection or colonisation with methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus aureus (MRSA) is not collected centrally in England.

National epidemiological data on MRSA are compiled by the Public Health Laboratory Service (PHLS) rather than centrally by the Department of Health, from isolates submitted voluntarily by hospitals in England and Wales for specialist microbiological tests. From these data the number of incidents of MRSA—ie. three or more patients infected or colonised by the same strain of MRSA in a month from the same hospital—is recorded. The total number of affected cases is not recorded. A table showing the number of incidents for the year ending April 1997 for each of the old regional health authorities in England has been placed in the Library.

Farmed Fish (Invermectin)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the human health risks posed by the use of ivermectin in the treatment of farmed fish; and if he will make a statement. [2103]

Mr. Rooker: I have been asked to reply.

We are not aware that any assessments of the human health risks posed by the use of ivermectin specifically in the treatment of farmed fish have been made.

Ivermectin is authorised in the EU for use in bovines, pigs, sheep and horses following thorough assessments of all required safety data by the Committee of Veterinary Medicinal Products (CVMP) in order to set a maximum residue limit (MRL). The purpose of MRLs is to ensure that no consumer, however extreme their diet, is at risk from the consumption of animal products containing residues at or above the level of the MRL.

However, an MRL has not been fixed for ivermectin in fish and there is no product authorised for such treatment. Nonetheless, ivermectin could be used to treat farmed fish under the prescribing cascade. Under this system, veterinarians may use their clinical judgment to prevent an animal from suffering by prescribing a veterinary medicine authorised in the UK for use in another species, a medicine authorised for human use or one made up "one-off".

The Veterinary Medicines Directorate tests for ivermectin in salmon under its non-statutory residues surveillance scheme. As no Maximum Residue Limit has been set for ivermectin in farmed fish, the Limit of Quantification, or LOQ (the point at which we can detect a measurable level of residues) is used as the Action Level for the purposes of reporting results in the quarterly Medicines Act Veterinary Information Service (MAVIS) and following-up with retailers and producers. The LOQ of the method used is 2 µg/kg. None of the 415 salmon samples collected under the 1996 non-statutory programme contained quantifiable residues of ivermectin.

DEFENCE

ASTOR Project

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the ASTOR project, with special reference to the employment implications and the timetable of the contract. [1922]

Mr. Spellar: Two contractors, Lockheed-Martin and Raytheon E-Systems, have completed competitive Project Definition studies. Invitations for Best and Final Offers for the Full Development and Production phase are being prepared, and we expect to issue them shortly. Both Lockheed-Martin and Raytheon have set up UK-based subsidiaries to carry out ASTOR work, and both are supported by UK sub-contractors. They have both offered UK industrial participation packages amounting to 100 per cent. of the contract value, over half of which work will be directly related to the ASTOR programme. Any export sales of the ASTOR system would further enhance employment prospects in the UK.

Consideration of the companies' detailed industrial participation proposals will form part of the assessment of the companies' Best and Final Offers.

Monkeys

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many monkeys died (a) during 1996 and (b) in 1997 to date in his Department's research establishments. [2396]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 11 June 1997:

I have been asked to reply to your question about the number of monkeys which have died since 1996 in Ministry of Defence research establishments since as Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) this matter falls within my area of responsibility.

An essential but relatively small part of the work of DERA involves a number of experiments with animals, mainly rodents, in order to ensure that the protective measures provided to the Armed Forces are effective and safe.

I can assure you that all experimental work is carried out in accordance with the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. In compliance with this Act all animals used in scientific procedures are reported annually to the Home Office, the responsible authority for overseeing the implementation of provisions of the Act. The Home Office publish national annual statistics about the number of animal experiments in the UK in Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals in Great Britain.

A very small number of non-human primates are used in essential DERA research work and a total of 14 monkeys were reported in the 1996 annual return to the Home Office as used in experiments and were, or will be, humanely killed in accordance with the provisions of the 1986 Act. The 1997 return has not yet been made. In recent years our figures have usually represented significantly less than 1% of the number of non-human primates reported as being used in scientific procedures.

National Service

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from ex-national service men regarding recognition for their role between 1947 and 1963; and if he will make a statement. [2142]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence has received and replied to in excess of 50 representations from ex-National Servicemen, particularly through their constituency MPs, on a variety of subjects relating to their service to the Nation in the post-war years.

Their concerns have included the provision of a memorial to those who performed National Service, the institution of a new medal, pensions, and the formation of a Veterans' Affairs Unit.

On memorials, I have indicated that in the event that funding by private donation or public subscription for a memorial were to be found, my Department would be happy to assist in identifying a suitable site and to provide representation at any dedication ceremony.

Auxiliary Oiler Contract

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what (a) detailed and (b) major changes his Department has sought to make to the design of ships under the Auxiliary Oiler contract; what was the cost to the Ministry of Defence of such changes; and what measures have been taken to ensure that costs do not escalate on the contract; [2850]

(2) whether the Auxiliary Oiler contract is running to the agreed tender price; and if he will make a statement; [2857]

(3) if the Auxiliary Oiler contract is on schedule; and if he will make a statement. [2856]

Mr. Spellar: The MOD has not sought any detailed or major design changes to the vessels to be procured under the Auxiliary Oiler (AO) contract. The Prime Contractor, VSEL, is designing the vessel to the agreed contract specification and price. The AO contract is currently on schedule and to cost.

Flight Data Recorders

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will reconsider his Department's policy on the fitting of flight data recorders to military aircraft. [2550]

Mr. Spellar: It is our policy to fit all new aircraft with flight data recorders. Retrofits are considered on a case-by-case basis taking account of service life remaining, aircraft safety record, cost and operational limitations. We have no plans to change this policy.

Data recorders have already been fitted to the following in-service aircraft fleets: Harrier GR7/T10, Hawk, Lynx, Nimrod, Sentry, Tornado F3, Tornado GR1, Tristar, Tucano and VC10 C1. Retrofit programmes are planned for the BAe 125, BAe 146, Chinook, Lynx, Puma, Sea King and VC10 K fleets; installation into the Jaguar and Sea Harrier/Harrier T4 fleets is under consideration.

Military Personnel (Attached Duties)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military personnel are currently on attached duties with foreign military forces; and which countries are involved. [2394]

Dr. John Reid: As a country with significant overseas interests and global responsibilities, the UK provides support and assistance, to a wide variety of Organisations and foreign Armed forces. The numbers vary from time to time. However according to available records, on 1 June this year there were 749 UK Service personnel on attached duties with the following countries:

Australia
Antigua
Bangladesh
Barbados
Belize
Bermuda
Belgium
British Virgin Islands
Brazil
Brunei
Baltic States
Canada
Czech Republic
Denmark
Egypt
France
Germany
Ghana
Indonesia
Italy
Kenya
Kuwait
Malaysia
Monserrat
Namibia
Netherlands
New Zealand
Norway
Pakistan
Oman
Saudi Arabia
Singapore
Sri Lanka
South Africa
Spain
Turks and Caicos Islands
United Arab Emirates
Ukraine
United States
Zimbabwe

In addition there were 1,883 UK Service personnel attached to NATO Headquarters and Agencies in the United States, United Kingdom, Italy, Belgium, Germany, Norway, Netherlands, Denmark, Portugal and Turkey. There were also 7 Service personnel attached to the United Nations Headquarters in New York, 6 attached to the WEU Headquarters in Belgium, and 4 attached to the Five Power Defence Arrangements Integrated Air Defence System Headquarters in Malaysia.

The above figures do no include UK Service personnel who are deployed overseas but are not attached to foreign military forces, for example Service personnel working in our Embassies, UK forces deployed on UN operations, or our forces deployed on coalition operations in the Gulf or in Former Yugoslavia.

Parachute Training Systems

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which private companies have formal arrangements or are permit holders with the MOD for the exploitation of the British Army Training and Parachute Training Systems. [2780]

Mr. Spellar: MOD's only extant licence for parachute training equipment relates to a parachute training mat and is held by Recticel Sutcliffe Ltd. MOD has several licences for other training equipment, but those are not related to parachute training and are mainly in the field of computer software.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what facilities are available to Sector Ltd.; and whether it is the only company to have a formal agreement with the UK Defence Secretary which permits the exploitation of British Army Training and Parachute Training Systems. [2782]

Mr. Spellar: Sector Ltd. does not hold a current licence for the exploitation of British Army parachute training items. The company terminated its previous licence by joint agreement on 8 May 1997 after many years in which no sales under the licence were reported to MOD. Accordingly, no special facilities are currently available to Sector Ltd. They will be accorded the same treatment as any other company approaching MOD for access to its facilities. No other company has been licensed by MOD to exploit the parachute training items formerly licensed to Sector Ltd.

Tactica Armoured Vehicles

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Tactica armoured vehicles have been purchased by his Department; which type of weapons are fitted to the vehicles; and if he will make a statement. [2784]

Mr. Spellar: My Department has purchased 35 Tactica armoured vehicles. The vehicles have no offensive capability and are not fitted with weapons.

Water Cannon

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is standard military operating procedure to use marker dye when deploying water cannon against peaceful demonstrators. [2783]

Dr. John Reid: Water cannon is not currently used by the Army in any circumstances, with or without marker dye.

Prisoners of War (Pay)

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to make available the review of deductions from the pay of officer prisoners of war and protected personnel. [3027]

Mr. Spellar: The detailed report of the Review has been submitted and is now being studied with care. The result will be announced as soon as possible.

Departmental Property

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the homes his Department owns are currently empty; how many have been empty for more than six months; and if he will provide a breakdown in each case by location. [3037]

Mr. Spellar: As at 31 March 1997, the most recent date for which figures are available, the Ministry of Defence held a stock of 65,800 Service families quarters in Great Britain of which 13,142 were empty. In addition, the Department has 3,059 families quarters in Northern Ireland of which 222 were empty.

Of the empty properties in Great Britain: 1,755 had been identified for disposal; 3,364 had been allocated to incoming families; 2,533 were awaiting major upgrade works; 633 had been identified as temporarily surplus and were being offered to local authorities or housing associations for short to medium term leasing and, finally, 1,117 were not available for disposal or leasing out as they were on military bases and security considerations prevent such action. Taking these management and security consideration into account results in a net voids level of 3,740—that is 5.86 per cent. of stock.

It is not possible to identify how many of these have been empty for over six months as such information is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

The best available breakdown by location, that is by Defence Housing Executive (DHE) Area, is as follows:

Area 1: 322; Area 2: 189; Area 3: 270; Area 4: 91; Area 5: 102; Area 6: 54; Area 7: 348; Area 8: 149; Area 9: 190; Area 10: 270; Area 11: 139; Area 12: 85; Area 13: 121; Area 14: 170; Area 15: 31; Area 16: 47; Area 17: 36; Area 18: 125; Area 20: 120; Area 21: 260; Area 22: 166; Area 23: 189; Area 24: 112; Area 25: 154.

A map showing the coverage of DHE Area across Great Britain is available in the Library of the House. It should be noted that there is no Area 19.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what initiatives his Department will undertake to further the prospects of achieving the global elimination of nuclear weapons. [2715]

Dr. John Reid: We have already made clear our commitment to the goal of the global elimination of nuclear weapons and to press for multilateral negotiations towards mutual, balanced and verifiable reductions in nuclear weapons. We will be examining how best to implement that commitment, particular in the context of the Strategic Defence Review.

Mr. Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is his Department's assessment of the total number of deployed nuclear warheads that represents a minimum deterrent for the United Kingdom; [2719]

(2) when he intends to implement Her Majesty's Government's policy not to deploy more warheads on Trident than were deployed on Polaris. [2721]

Mr. Reid: The Government has already made plain its commitment to the retention of Trident. Our deterrence requirements, including warhead numbers, will however be examined as part of the Strategic Defence Review.

Mr. Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Trident D5 missiles his Department intends to purchase from the United States. [2720]

Mr. Spellar: The present planning assumption is that the UK will purchase 65 Trident missiles. This requirement will be tested during the Strategic Defence Review before final decisions are made.

Mr. Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's latest estimate of the unit cost of purchasing Trident D5 missiles from the United States in the present financial year. [2718]

Mr. Spellar: If it is decided to proceed in accordance with present planning assumptions, my department will be placing further orders for Trident D5 missiles during the current UK financial year. The unit cost of the missiles will be a matter for negotiation between the manufacturers and the US Department of Defence, which order on their own behalf and on ours in identical terms. The US DOD estimate a cost of $21 million per missile in respect of recent orders. The figure excludes guidance equipment, re-entry bodies and spares.

WE-177s

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department expects to remove all remaining WE-177s from operational service. [2717]

Dr. John Reid: It was announced in April 1995 that all WE-177 bombs would be withdrawn from operational service by the end of 1998. In line with the Government's commitment to be as open as possible, I am now able to confirm that all these bombs will be withdrawn by 31 March of that year.

Departmental Documents

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage and how many documents in 1996 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of, and (g) otherwise unaccounted for. [2518]

Mr. Spellar: No document falls due for selection and transfer to the Public Record Office until it is at least 30 years old. The suitability of a document for permanent preservation under the terms of the Public Records Act, 1958, will be reviewed during that period. The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested. To do so would incur disproportionate cost. However, in order to comply with their duties under the Act, Departments are obliged to make arrangements for the safekeeping of their records, with a view to their possible selection and transfer to the Public Record Office and eventual release to the public. The general arrangements for extended closure or retention of public records are set out in Chapter 9 of the White Paper on Open Government (Cm 2290) published in July 1993.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many pupils currently receive support from the assisted places scheme in each of the recipient schools; if he will state the total amount of cash received by each school since the assisted places scheme began; and if he will make a statement. [1996]

Mr. Hain: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Low Pay Commission

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representatives there will be on the Low Pay Commission from Wales; and if he will make a statement on prospects for a minimum wage in Wales. [2000]

Mr. Hain: The Low Pay Commission will comprise representatives of employers, including small businesses, employees and independents. Before making its recommendations to Government on the level at which the National Minimum Wage might be set, it will take into account the economic circumstances prevailing at the time throughout the UK. I have specifically requested that it takes evidence from businesses and others in Wales.

Nursery Education

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the percentage of four-year-olds in nursery education in each LEA area in Wales. [1998]

Mr. Hain: The information requested is shown in the following table. Pupils may attend other schools outside the LEA area in which they reside, and there are inconsistencies between the dates on which pupil and population numbers are assessed. These affect all LEAs and have resulted in percentages exceeding 100 in two cases.

January 1996 Schools' Census and Registrar General's population estimates.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he plans to increase the number of three and four-year-olds in nursery education. [1999]

Mr. Hain: Our initial aim is to ensure a free, at least part-time, place for every four-year-old whose parents want one; with targets for extending provision to three-year-olds. We shall be consulting shortly with the local authority, voluntary and private sectors and other interested bodies in Wales about arrangements for early years education from April 1998.

Women Employees

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of women in (a) part-time and (b) full-time jobs (i) in 1987 and (ii) at the latest available date. [2001]

Mr. Hain: The following table shows the number of women in part-time and full-time jobs, including the self employed.

Women in part-time and full-time jobs in Wales

Investment

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the incentives available for enterprises located in areas of high unemployment which plan further investment to (a) create new jobs and (b) safeguard existing jobs, with particular reference to south Wales; [2257]

(2) if he will list the incentives available for inward investors in areas of high unemployment with particular reference to south Wales. [2258]

Mr. Hain: The main form of Welsh Office incentive available in the south Wales Assisted Areas is Regional Selective Assistance (RSA). Grant is available to indigenous companies and inward investors alike, to help with eligible investment projects which create and/or safeguard jobs. Other Welsh Office assistance includes four types of innovation grant offered under the SMART WALES banner, which are available to small and medium sized enterprises. Various other incentives are offered by the Welsh Development Agency, Cardiff Bay Development Corporation, the Training and Enterprise Councils and local authorities. Comprehensive details of the forms of assistance available in specific areas is available from Business Connect Wales (telephone: 0345 96 97 98 or Internet http://www.bc-wales.org.uk).

Later this summer we will publish a Welsh Economic Strategy, which will set out our general approach and priorities. My right hon. Friend is currently consulting the business community in Wales about how their voice may best be heard within Government.

Telecommunications

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about the provision of telecommunication services in the Llanthoney Valley near Abergavenny. [2371]

Mr. Hain: None.

Departmental Documents

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage and how many documents in 1996 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of, and (g) otherwise unaccounted for. [2514]

Mr. Ron Davies: No document falls due for transfer to the Public Record Office until it is 30 years old. The suitability of a document for selection for permanent preservation under the terms of the Public Records Act 1958 will be reviewed during that period. The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested. To do so would incur disproportionate cost. However, in order to comply with their duties under the Act, departments are obliged to make arrangements for the safe keeping of their records, with a view to their possible selection and transfer to the Public Record Office and eventual release to the public. The general arrangements for extended closure or retention of public records are set out in Chapter 9 of the White Paper Open Government of July 1993 (Cm 2290).

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the species and habitats included as performance indicators for Welsh ESAs and the specific objectives relating to each; and if he will make a statement concerning progress made by farmers in respect of these species and habitats. [2684]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The information requested is in the Welsh Office report: Targets and Performance indicators for ESAs in Wales October 1995. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library of the House. Reports on progress are not yet available.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his policy towards environmentally sensitive area schemes in Wales; and what is (a) the budget currently available for ESAs, (b) the number of farmers and landowners entered into each ESA scheme, (c) the area of land so entered and (d) the number of project officers employed to promote schemes. [2688]

Mr. Griffiths: The Government is committed to an effective agri-environmental schemes for Wales. The ESA programmes are included in a review of agri-environmental schemes, the results of which will be announced later this year. The provision for 1997–98 is £5.89 million. The current number of agreement holders and area under agreement for each ESA is shown in the following table. Countryside and Agricultural Information Service (CAIS) and ESA Project Officers all promote the scheme. I estimate that 2.4 staff years are spent on this activity.

Methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus Aureus

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of MRSA have been recorded in each health authority district in Wales in each of the last 12 months. [2987]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The available data on the number of reported cases are given in the following table:

[1] As the reporting of cases by laboratories is a continuous process the level of completeness of the figures shown may vary. Data may include some GP referrals. The number indicated are patients identified with MRSA (methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus). Only a proportion of these will have clinical illness (estimated at 50 per cent.) due to MRSA infection. The remainder will be carriers of the organism. Cases where the area of residence of the patient was not provided have been included with data for the Health Authority in which the reporting laboratory is located.

Abergavenny Slaughterhouse

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about the proposed closure of the Abergavenny slaughterhouse; and if he will make a statement. [2377]

Mr. Win Griffiths: We have received several representations about the future of the Abergavenny slaughterhouse and whether it will participate in the Over Thirty Months Scheme, which allows for the purchase, slaughter and ultimate destruction of cattle over 30 months of age. The Intervention Board Executive Agency will announce the successful bidders soon.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Benefits

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what assessment she has made of the impact of the Benefits Integrity Programme on the (a) staffing and (b) delivery of the ordinary claiming process for disability benefits; [2442]

(2) what procedures Benefit Agency staff will be expected to follow in relation to claimants who are revealed as claiming a lower level of disability living allowance than they are eligible for under the Benefit Integrity Programme; [2443]

(3) what training and over what average length of time will be provided to Benefits Agency staff who will be visiting claimants of disability living allowance from July onwards under the Benefits Integrity Programme. [2444]

Mr. Denham: One of our key aims is rebuilding integrity in, and public support for, the Social Security system and the way in which public money is spent. Research by the Department indicates that we may be paying £0.5 billion a year to people who are not entitled to receive it. We need to focus on those who are properly entitled to benefit.

This is why we have set up the Benefit Integrity Project. However, we do regard it as essential that disabled people are treated fairly and with respect, and in an unthreatening way. The administration of this programme is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with further details.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 10 June 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about the Benefit Integrity Programme.

The Benefit Integrity Project was set up in response to the recent Benefit Review of DLA. Over the next two years, specially trained staff will make enquiries by postal questionnaire or home visit in around 425,000 cases to establish whether Disability Living Allowance (DLA) is being paid correctly.

The Benefit Integrity Project is a completely separate operation from the processing of new claims to DLA and as such, will have no effect on the staffing and delivery of the normal claims process.

The Benefit Integrity Project is intended to confirm that the correct rate of benefit is in payment. Where it appears that the incorrect rate is in payment, the case will be passed to an independent Adjudication Officer to consider a review of the existing decision. Any new decision will be based on all the available evidence and where appropriate will lead to an increase in the rate of benefit. All new decisions will carry the normal rights to seek a further review or appeal.

Visiting Officers for the Benefits Integrity Project will be drawn from existing experienced staff located at Disability Benefit Centres. If there is a need to transfer experienced staff currently processing claims to the Project, they will not be released until their replacements are fully trained. Building upon their existing knowledge, each Visiting Officer will attend a five day course which will cover the background to the Project, visiting and interviewing skills, security awareness and staff safety.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the letter of 12 May, ref. YM631037C, why the hon. Member for Walsall, North has not received a full reply from the Disability Benefits Directorate over the case of a constituent; and why the direct line 01253 337792 was unobtainable on 5 June. [2840]

Mr. Denham: One of our key aims is to improve the service provided to claimants and other customers. Queries on Benefits Agency operational matters are the responsibility of Peter Mathison, its Chief Executive. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Winnick, dated 10 June 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning a reply from the Disability Benefits Directorate over the case of a constituent and why the direct line 01253-337792 was unobtainable on 5 June.

It may help if I explain that at as you copied me your letter of 8 May to the Director of Disability Benefits, I arranged for the issues raised to be investigated. The acknowledgement letter of 12 May from the Disability Benefit Director should have advised you that I would be responding by 9 June and not by 27 May. Unfortunately this was a mistake for which I apologise. My reply was issued on 9 June. The Benefits Agency Business Plan states that the Agency will reply to MPs within an absolute target of 20 Working days from the date of receipt of the correspondence.

Due to a reorganisation of the Disability Benefits Unit Official Correspondence Section, one of the direct line numbers, 01253 337792, was disconnected earlier this year. Immediate action was taken to amend existing stocks of stationery. Unfortunately this did not happen in the acknowledgement sent to you and I offer you my sincere apologies. I can assure you that procedures are in place to prevent a reoccurrence.

I have arranged for the list of current direct line numbers to be sent to you.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Child Maintenance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make it an offence to (a) conceal assets from the Child Support Agency and (b) try to reduce income in order to avoid paying maintenance. [1118]

Mr. Bradley: The Child Support Agency already has wide powers to obtain and verify information required to assess child support maintenance. Also, where clients believe that income or assets have been misrepresented they can seek a departure from the formula assessment. However, we will be looking closely at this and other areas of the Agency's operations over the coming months to consider whether improvements can be made.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list (a) the terms of the moratorium which will apply to the Benefits Agency (Wales) Blueprint for the Future and (b) the mechanism for undertaking a review of this and other Benefits Agency change proposals. [1727]

Mr. Field: The "Benefits Agency Wales - Blueprint for the Future" consultation document was published on 15 November 1996 and the period of public consultation was extended to 28 February 1997, to ensure that Benefits Agency customers and their representatives were able to make the representations that they wished on the consultation document.

These representations will be considered by Ministers in due course, and announcements will be made in the light of these considerations.

We will be assessing our proposals in the light of this document, and also each of the proposed Benefits Agency initiatives which are part of the Department's current programme of changes to ensure that they will provide the improved services, better security and value for money that we want to see in a modernised Social Security system. Announcements will be made in due course.

Departmental Documents

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage and how many documents in 1996 she estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by her Department in full, (d) retained by her Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of and (g) otherwise unaccounted for. [2522]

Mr. Field: In 1996 the Department of Social Security did not transfer any documents to the Public Record Office. However, during that year 17,935 files were reviewed of which 1,392 were selected for permanent preservation and transferred to the Public Records Office in March 1997. None of the files was censored. No applications were made to the Lord Chancellor to retain documents in full or in part. A total of 15,957 files were destroyed, no files were otherwise disposed of or unaccounted for.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Education Standards

5. Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to improve education standards in Northern Ireland. [1382]

27. Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to improve education standards in Northern Ireland. [1404]

28. Miss Melanie Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to improve education standards in Northern Ireland. [1405]

Mr. Worthington: The Government is committed to raising standards across all sectors. In working up plans for Northern Ireland, I will be giving particular attention to the provision for pupils at pre-school and early primary school; and to laying secure foundations in literacy and numeracy. We will be developing provision for vocational education and strengthening the linkage between secondary schools, Further Education and Training. Improving school discipline and teaching quality, and in particular promoting strong leadership from headteachers, will also be given priority.

Peace Campus Project (University of Ulster)

7. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the peace campus project proposed by the University of Ulster. [1384]

Mr. Worthington: The Government is very much aware of the efforts to find appropriate means of achieving economic and educational regeneration in the Springvale area, and of the innovative proposals under consideration which seek to deliver these objectives. My officials are currently in discussion with both the University of Ulster and the Belfast Institute of Further and Higher Education about ways of delivering the desired outcomes.

Peace Process

9. Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the Northern Ireland peace process. [1386]

10. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the Northern Ireland peace process. [1387]

11. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on discussions she has had with the Northern Ireland political parties in respect of the peace process. [1388]

13. Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the Northern Ireland peace process. [1390]

15. Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on current progress in the peace process. [1392]

18. Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on progress in the Northern Ireland peace process. [1395]

19. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on current talks taking place in order to reach a political settlement. [1396]

22. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the Northern Ireland peace process. [1399]

25. Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the Northern Ireland peace process. [1402]

Marjorie Mowlam: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Amber Valley (Judy Mallaber).

17. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the intention of Sinn Fein and the IRA to seek a peaceful settlement in Northern Ireland. [1394]

Marjorie Mowlam: Two meetings have been held between Sinn Fein and officials to assist us to assess whether Sinn Fein is genuinely ready to give up violence and commit itself to politics alone. It has not been possible to make a firm assessment yet.

Youth Unemployment

12. Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to reduce unemployment among young people in Northern Ireland. [1389]

Mr. Worthington: The Government will pursue policies to promote economic growth and job creation, and we will offer young people constructive alternatives to benefit. In particular, the New Deal is our pledge to 18–24 year olds who have been unemployed for over six months, to enable them to develop and realise their potential. They will be offered training and employment opportunities with employers, the voluntary sector and an environmental task force. I believe that both young people and industry will be keen to make the most of these new opportunities.

Constitutional Proposals

14. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on her constitutional proposals. [1391]

Marjorie Mowlam: I would like to see new and widely acceptable political institutions established in Northern Ireland as part of a wider political settlement. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has said that the Framework Documents published by the previous administration and the Irish Government in February 1995 provide a reasonable basis for discussion, but these issues are all for consideration in the multi-party negotiations and can only be taken forward by agreement among the parties and subject to a referendum in Northern Ireland.

Small and Medium-sized Enterprises

16. Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the performance of small and medium-sized enterprises in Northern Ireland. [1393]

24. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the viability of small and medium-sized enterprises in Northern Ireland. [1401]

Barbara Follett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the performance of small and medium-sized enterprises in Northern Ireland. [1379]

Mr. Ingram: The Small Business Agency for Northern Ireland, LEDU, has just published its results for 1996–97, recording its best year to date in terms of the performance of its client companies.

The 1996 survey of LEDU client companies revealed a net increase in employment of 3,710 jobs; an increase of 11 per cent. over the previous year well ahead of overall national and regional trends for the fifth consecutive year. In addition LEDU assisted 1,543 new businesses to start-up during 1996–97, 136 of which represented businesses with potential to engage in future export led growth; an increase of 72 per cent. over the past two years.

Marches

20. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action she (a) has taken and (b) proposes to take, to implement the recommendations of the North commission regarding marches. [1397]

Mr. Ingram: As set out in the Queen's speech, the Government is committed to bringing forward legislation on parades, which will fully reflect the analysis in the North Report. Our overriding principle is to uphold the rule of law, creating new structures to respect all the rights at issue. The legislation will draw upon the experience of this marching season, to achieve any enhancements which are possible to the proposed measures in the North Report.

Parades

21. Ms Hewitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to help reduce tensions over parades in Northern Ireland. [1398]

23. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals she intends to bring forward to reduce tensions relating to parades. [1400]

Marjorie Mowlam: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier to my hon. Friends the Members for Wigan (Mr. Stott) and for South Ribble (Mr. Borrow).

Bloody Sunday

26. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations she has received concerning Bloody Sunday; and if she will make a statement. [1403]

Marjorie Mowlam: We have received four letters on "Bloody Sunday", two from the Bloody Sunday Justice Campaign, one from the Standing Committee on Human Rights and one from a Member of this House. We have also received eight letters from members of the public. I do not think it appropriate to make a statement at this time.

Carers

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps she plans to take to ensure that carers are informed of (a) their rights and (b) the opportunities for a carer's assessment. [2492]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 9 June 1997]: Health and Social Services Boards and Trusts were directed by the Department to offer carers a separate assessment of their own needs if so requested from 1 April 1996. Guidance on Carers' Assessments, issued in February 1996, requires Trusts to determine their criteria for separate carers' assessments; to update their publicity material to include separate assessment for carers; and to put in place arrangements to ensure that all concerned are made aware of the criteria for obtaining such assessments. The Department will continue to monitor the implementation of the guidance as part of its Regional Strategy monitoring arrangements.

Education Funding

Mr. Roy Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has for additional funding for education in Northern Ireland. [1523]

Mr. Worthington: The Government has begun a Comprehensive Spending Review to ensure that, within the published plans for 1997–98 and 1998–99, expenditure is aligned with the Government's priorities, including education. We have already reallocated £4 million to address the problems facing schools in 1997–98. Decisions on the Comprehensive Spending Review will help to inform allocations in future years.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Child Support Agency cases were finalised by the Belfast Office of the Agency between 1 April 1996 and 1 April 1997. [1524]

Mr. Worthington: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Northern Ireland Child Support Agency under its Chief Executive, Mr. Patrick Devlin. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Pat Devlin to Mr. Clifford Forsythe, dated 11 June 1997:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question about the number of cases finalised by the Belfast Office between 1 April 1996 and 1 April 1997.

The number of applications cleared by the Northern Ireland Child Support Agency between 1 April 1996 and 31 March 1997 was as follows:

	Number
Applications assessed	4,335
Applications cleared without assessment	5,299
Total	9,634

Methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus Aureus

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of MRSA have been recorded in each health authority district in Northern Ireland in each of the last 12 months. [2982]

Mr. Worthington: This information is not available centrally.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has for fundamental changes within the Royal Ulster Constabulary; what plans she has for consultation in this respect; and if she will make a statement. [1380]

Mr. Ingram: We want the Chief Constable's Fundamental Review implemented. We will also bring forward proposals on the tripartite structure, and on police complaints. We will consult widely about possible improvements to community police links, and aim for comprehensive parliamentary scrutiny of these proposals. Taken together our proposals represent an effective response, appropriate to Northern Ireland, to growing public expectations both within the UK and beyond of what the Police Service can deliver.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

BSE

Mrs. McGuire: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date the most recently born bovine animal with BSE was born; and if he will make a statement. [3508]

Dr. John Cunningham: BSE has been confirmed in a Highland cow born in Wales on 17 January 1994. This animal was two years and 10 months old when clinical signs were first observed. This is the first case of BSE in an animal born in 1994 but is unlikely to be the last as the risk of exposure through feed was not significantly different in the early months of 1994 compared with the closing months of 1993 when cases have already been confirmed. The dam of this particular cow is still alive and shows no signs of BSE.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what scientific advice he has received on preventing BSE infected beef being imported from Germany; and what steps he is taking to implement such advice. [2484]

Mr. Rooker: SEAC considered the issue of bovine imports into the UK, taking into account the Commission's assessment of surveillance and controls in other Member States, and advised Ministers on 2 June. I refer the right hon. Member to the Statement made by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 5 June (Official Report, Columns 227–28).

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the comparative effectiveness of eliminating BSE in cattle of (a) the 30 month scheme and (b) the selective cull. [2800]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer given on 10 June 1997]: The Over Thirty Months Scheme (OTMS) is a measure to protect public health, not to eliminate BSE. On the other hand, the selective cull is aimed at reducing the number of cases of BSE by culling cattle which as young calves may have been exposed to the same feed as animals that have already succumbed to BSE. We estimate that the selective cull might prevent a maximum of 1,500 confirmed cases of BSE up to the end of 1999. The OTMS might prevent between one third and a half of that number, although the number of animals slaughtered under OTMS is many times greater than under the selective cull.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his assessment of the use of BSE-testing developments by Messrs Proteus. [2248]

Mr. Rooker: The Department's involvement with Proteus has been confined to the assessment of a PrP antiserum for the diagnosis of BSE by immunohistochemistry in brain sections of cattle killed with clinical signs of BSE.

In a joint study between the Veterinary Research Laboratories, Dublin and the Central Veterinary Laboratory (CVL), Weybridge, the performance of the Proteus PrP antiserum, designated 168, was compared with that of another PrP antiserum 971 raised at CVL. Each laboratory replicated the PrP immunostaining protocols used in both participating laboratories. Closely similar results were obtained in each laboratory with both antibodies performing similarly in the confirmation of clinical cases of BSE.

The studies did not include evaluation of the use of the 168 antibody for the diagnosis of BSE during the incubation period of the disease.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects SEAC to have completed its consideration and given its advice on the European Commission's march draft report on risk factors and surveillance procedures on BSE in the community. [2249]

Mr. Rooker: SEAC considered the European Commission's draft report and advised Ministers on 2 June. I would refer my hon. Friend to SEAC's statement which was placed in the Library of the House on 5 June.

Bread and Flour Regulations

Mrs. McGuire: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons the Government is planning to replace the Bread and Flour Regulations 1995; and if he will make a statement. [3507]

Mr. Rooker: European law requires draft national legislation to be notified to the European Commission (and through them to other member states) to ensure that it does not introduce new technical barriers to trade. The Bread and Flour Regulations 1995 were a simplification of earlier Regulations. They did not introduce any new standards and at the time it was considered that they did not need to be notified.

However, the ECJ has recently ruled that even a simplification of existing Regulations should be subject to the notification procedure.

The European Commission has indicated that it considers the Bread and Flour Regulations 1995 to be technically in breach of Community law and the Government has therefore agreed to revoke and remake them in accordance with EU notification procedures.

Draft Regulations are now being issued for public consultation. They revoke and re-enact the Bread and Flour Regulations 1995 and incorporate amendments made by the Bread and Flour (Amendment Regulations) 1996.

Common Agriculture Policy

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what scope there is in the existing CAP structure for redirecting United Kingdom agricultural support toward more sustainable practices including argi-environmental based subsidies; what are the main administrative and policy changes required for argi-environmental CAP reform to be feasible on a European-wide basis; and if he will make a statement. [2642]

Mr. Rooker: CAP rules on farm supports, with few exceptions, allow no discretion to Member States to vary the rates of payment. Reform of the CAP as advocated by the Government would result in due course in EU expenditure savings, some of which should be directed towards well-defined agri-environmental objectives.

Pesticides

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of the active ingredients in common use within pesticides have no safety data; and if he will make a statement. [2629]

Mr. Rooker: All pesticides must be approved by Ministers before they may be marketed or used in the United Kingdom. The Pesticides Safety Directorate in my Department takes the lead in evaluating agricultural pesticides and holds safety data on all active ingredients used in approved agricultural pesticides. The Health and Safety Executive plays a similar role for non-agricultural pesticides.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many different pesticides products are on the market; how many active ingredients they are formulated from; of those active ingredients how many are (a) in common use and (b) adequately tested; and if he will make a statement. [2627]

Mr. Rooker: Approximately 3,700 pesticide products are currently approved for use in agriculture and the home garden. The number of active ingredients contained in one or more of these products is approximately 340.

There is no clear definition of "common use". Levels of active ingredient used will change substantially as new chemicals replace old ones and will vary year by year according to factors such as pest pressures and weather patterns. So far as agricultural uses are concerned, the weights of active ingredients and crop areas treated are monitored and published as Pesticide Usage Surveys.

No active ingredient may be included in an approved pesticide until it has been assessed according to current standards. In addition, under United Kingdom and EC arrangements, programmes to review, "old" active ingredients are carried out to ensure that supporting data packages are brought up to modern standards.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many of the pesticides in common use in the United Kingdom are possible (a) carcinogens, (b) mutagens and (c) allergens; and if he will make a statement. [2631]

Mr. Rooker: There are a number of different classification systems for mutagens, carcinogens and allergens. These are mainly based in a laboratory assessment of the innate hazard of the compound.

Pesticides are approved following a thorough evaluation by the independent Advisory Committee on Pesticides of the risk that they pose in use. This assessment looks not only at the laboratory estimate of hazard but also at the conditions of use and the consequent exposure of operators, bystanders, food consumers and the environment. If the risk is acceptably small, approval can be granted.

Because the pesticides regulatory system is focused upon acctual risk rather than potential hazard, the figures requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information is (a) held and (b) regularly gathered on the health effects of pesticides; how this information is collected; and if he will make a statement. [2628]

Mr. Rooker: Pesticides are approved on the basis of scientific information supplied by applicant companies; health effects are a key part of this data package. Companies are also required to supply any data that they subsequently generate or receive that may indicate a need to reconsider the risk assessment.

The Health and Safety Executive collect and investigate reports of incidents involving agricultural pesticides. The Department carries out and publishes a comprehensive programme of monitoring of pesticide residues in food and the results are considered by the Working Party on Pesticides Residues, a sub-group of the independent Advisory Committee on Pesticides.

Food (Colourings)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those artificial colours permitted for use in food within the United Kingdom; if he will indicate those which are banned in (a) the USA and (b) Norway; and if he will make a statement. [2630]

Mr. Rooker: The following artificial colours are permitted for use in food within the United Kingdom:

EC number	Name
E 102	Tartrazine
E 104	Quinoline Yellow
E 110	Sunset Yellow FCFOrange Yellow S
E 122	Azorubine, Carmoisine
E 123	Amaranth
E 124	Ponceau 4R, Cochineal Red A
E 127	Erythrosine
E 128	Red 2G
E 129	Allura Red AC
E 131	Patent Blue V
E 132	Indigotine, Indigo carmine
E 133	Brilliant Blue FCF
E 142	Green S
E 151	Brilliant Black BN, Black PN
E 153	Vegetable carbon
E 154	Brown FK
E 155	Brown HT
E 170	Calcium carbonate
E 171	Titanium dioxide
E 172	Iron oxides and hydroxides
E 173	Aluminium
E 174	Silver
E 175	Gold
E 180	Litholrubine BK

All of these have been approved under harmonised rules which apply throughout the EU, following safety clearance by the European Commission's Scientific Committee for Food. The information requested about bans which may exist in the USA and Norway is not readily available. I will write to my hon. Friend.

Animal Feed

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many and what percentage of feed compounders currently list full ingredients when labelling animal feeding contents; and if he will make a statement. [2694]

Mr. Rooker: A survey by UKASTA, the trade association representing compound feed manufacturers, has indicated that around 90 per cent. of the animal feed manufactured by its members is now subject to full ingredient listing. The Government is continuing to monitor the situation and will take action if necessary.

Beef

Mr. Prior: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what actions he plans to take to support (a) beef prices and (b) the beef production industry. [2530]

Mr. Rooker: The current problems of the UK beef market are not simply the result of BSE, but reflect the fact that there is significant structural imbalance between supply and demand on the EU market. In discussion with Commissioner Fischler and representatives of other Member States on the Agriculture Council, the Government has repeatedly stressed that reform of the beef regime is urgently necessary to address that imbalance. In the meantime, we are urging the Commission to make progress towards lifting the export ban and to introduce controls on beef production in other Member States equivalent to those applied here. In the absence of agreement on such controls, we will not hesitate to take unilateral action to ensure that any beef imported onto the UK market and competing with the domestic product meets the same high standards as apply in the UK.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement as to the difference in treatment by the regulatory authorities of (a) imported beef and (b) beef produced in the United Kingdom. [2246]

Mr. Rooker: All fresh meat produced in or imported into the United Kingdom must be produced in accordance with harmonised hygiene rules laid down in Council Directive 64/433/EEC (as amended). Also, meat derived from bovines which, at the time of slaughter, were more than 30 months old is prohibited under the Fresh Meat (Beef Controls) (No 2) Regulations 1996 for sale for human consumption unless it comes from animals covered by the Beef Assurance Scheme, or born, reared and slaughtered in those third countries specifically excluded by the Regulations where there is no known risk of BSE.

In addition, since 1989 there has been a requirement for specified bovine material (SBM) to be removed from bovine animals which have died or been slaughtered in the United Kingdom. SBM is currently defined in the Specified Bovine Material Order 1997 as the whole head (excluding the tongue), spinal cord, spleen, thymus, tonsils and intestines of cattle over six months old and the thymus and intestines of calves under six months. The SBM may not be used in food, animal feed, cosmetic, pharmaceutical or medical products. It has to be stained and disposed of under strictly controlled conditions.

On 5 June, following advice from the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee, my right hon. Friend, the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food announced the opening of consultations on an amendment to the 1997 Order, Official Report, columns 227–28, which would extend these controls to imported beef, other than from those countries excluded by the Fresh Meat (Beef Controls) (No 2) Regulations 1996. This is not an import ban. We intend to implement these measures in late July if agreement to introduce similar Community-wide controls is not forthcoming by then.

Newcastle Disease

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total amount of compensation to be paid by his Department as a result of the (a) Ross on Wye and (b) Sussex outbreaks of Newcastle disease in 1996–97; and if he will make a statement. [2692]

Mr. Rooker: The Department has paid £1,559,803 to date in respect of three outbreaks of Newcastle disease near Ross on Wye and £21,235 for two outbreaks in Sussex which occurred during 1996–97. A further sum of about £300,000 in compensation is expected to be paid in connection with one of the outbreaks near Ross on Wye.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment his Department has made of the reasons behind the 1996–97 outbreaks of Newcastle disease in (a) Ross on Wye and (b) Sussex; and if he will make a statement. [2693]

Mr. Rooker: The State Veterinary Service has conducted an epidemiological investigation into the cause of three outbreaks of Newcastle disease in Ross on Wye and one in Sussex which occurred in January this year. It has not been possible to confirm either a definitive source for the infection or how the virus had spread between premises. However, it is believed that the virus may have originated from migrating birds and was subsequently spread between premises by the movement of people, vehicles or equipment.

An outbreak of Newcastle disease in a pheasant farm in Sussex in May 1996 was attributed to contact with wild pigeons or doves which were infected with the PMV1 virus.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department insists on duly completed milk quota transfer forms being submitted before proceeding with dairy produce quota regulation apportionment. [2482]

Mr. Rooker: Yes. However, in cases where the parties are in dispute as to the apportionment of quota or where the Intervention Board has reasonable grounds for believing that a correct apportionment of quota may not have been made, the Dairy Produce Quotas Regulations 1997 provide for the matter to be referred to arbitration. Once the arbitrator has arrived at his decision on the appropriate apportionment, the quota register held by the Intervention Board will be amended, if required, in accordance with the arbitrator's findings.

Food Safety

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that imported foodstuffs meet the same safety criteria as required of home grown foodstuffs. [2483]

Mr. Rooker: Where harmonised Community rules exist, imports must comply with the EU legislation designed to protect public and animal health. Where there are no harmonised rules, imports must comply with national importation rules. Control checks are carried out at the port of importation for products from third countries and at retail level.

Food Additives

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of food additives in use in the United Kingdom are regulated by the EU; and if he will make a statement. [2634]

Mr. Rooker: Harmonised EU rules have now been introduced for the vast majority of food additives in use in the United Kingdom. These include all colours, sweeteners, flavourings and extraction solvents and 24 classes of miscellaneous additives. Harmonised rules for the use of flour treatment agents are currently being discussed. Only a very few miscellaneous additives and some carrier solvents now remain subject to national controls only.

Processed Food

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of food consumed in the United Kingdom is processed food; and if he will make a statement. [2636]

Mr. Rooker: Virtually all foodstuffs undergo some form of processing before sale to consumers. If my hon. Friend has a particular concern, perhaps he will write to me.

Canine Spongiform Encephalopathies

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of recent research regarding canine spongiform encephalopathies; and if he will make a statement. [2633]

Mr. Rooker: No cases of transmissible spongiform encephalopathy have been confirmed in canines.

We are aware of a case of a Norwegian dog showing a spongiform change in the brain. We have sought clarification from the Norwegian authorities on the results of their investigation into this case.

Quota Hopping

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on progress towards resolving the problem of quota hopping. [3025]

Mr. Morley: There have been extensive discussions with the Commission and others in recent weeks about measures to deal with quota hopping. Progress is being made and we expect to be able to make an announcement shortly.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce measures to require processed food to be labelled to indicate whether it contains any material which has been genetically engineered; and if he will make a statement. [2932]

Mr. Rooker: I will be pressing at European level for all foods which may contain genetically modified ingredients to be clearly labelled so as to give consumers a real choice in what they buy.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 22 May, Official Report, columns 167-69, what conclusions his Department has drawn from that evidence on the responsibility of badgers for the transmission of TB to cattle. [2247]

Mr. Rooker: There is a great deal of circumstantial evidence that badgers are implicated in the transmission of bovine tuberculosis to cattle. Professor Krebs is looking at the incidence of tuberculosis in cattle and badgers and assessing the scientific evidence for the links between them. I expect him to report later this year. We will consider any recommendations Professor Krebs makes very carefully.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his policy towards environmentally sensitive area schemes in England; and what is (a) the budget currently available for ESAs, (b) the number of farmers and landowners entered into each ESA scheme, (c) the area of land so entered and (d) the number of project officers employed to promote schemes. [2685]

Dr. John Cunningham: A total of £34.8 million has been allocated for payments to English ESA agreement holders in the current financial year.

The number of farmers and landowners and the area of land entered into the English ESAs at the end of the 1996 application period are shown in the attached table. MAFF Regional Service Centres are currently processing applications made during the 1997 window.

The English ESA scheme is currently supported by 29 ESA Project Officers and 16 Assisted Project Officers.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the species and habitats included as performance indicators for English ESAs and the specific objectives relating to each; and if he will make a statement concerning the progress made by farmers in respect of those species and habitats. [2686]

Dr. Cunningham: Five year objectives and targets for each of the 22 English Environmentally Sensitive Areas have been produced and copies of these have been placed in the Library of the House. These include targets for specific habitats and species.

A summary of the results of a comprehensive programme of monitoring of the five Stage I ESAs, launched in 1987, was presented as evidence to the House of Commons Select Committee Enquiry into ESAs last year. (Ref HC 45-II pages 10–14). This describes the achievements for targets set up to 1997.

Reports on the environmental monitoring of the five Stage II ESAs, launched in 1988, and the six Stage III ESAs, launched in 1993, will be published later this summer and those on the first five years of the six Stage IV ESAs are expected to be available in the summer of 1998.

Revised objectives and targets for the Stage I ESAs for the period 1997–2002, reflecting targets under the Government's Biodiversity Action Plan, are in preparation and should be available in the Autumn.

Countryside Stewardship Scheme

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the eligibility criteria for land managers who wish to enter the Countryside Stewardship Scheme; what financial limits are applied (a) annually and (b) over five years to applications for the scheme; and what is the total budget available over each of the next four years. [2687]

Dr. John Cunningham: The Countryside Stewardship Scheme is available throughout England, other than in Environmentally Sensitive Areas, to anyone who owns or manages land, including farmers and non-farming land managers, voluntary bodies, local authorities and community groups.

The annual financial limit for new agreements is £5 million. An additional provision of £0.5 million will be available for approvals in 1998 under a pilot scheme for arable land to be introduced as part of Countryside Stewardship.

The total budget for payments to farmers is £16.7 million for 1997–98, £22.1 million for 1998–99, and £26.7 million for each of the years 1999–2000 and 2000–2001.

Departmental Documents

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage and how many documents in 1996 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of, and (g) otherwise unaccounted for. [2516]

Mr. Morley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him today by my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department.

Pet Passports

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to introduce a trial passports for pets scheme to replace quarantine for animals from the EU and approved rabies free countries; and if he will make a statement. [2984]

Mr. Rooker: We are considering whether alternatives to quarantine might give equal or better protection against the importation of rabies.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Firearms

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of persons resident in the United Kingdom who are authorised to possess a firearm for their personal protection (a) under a certificate, permit or other form of authority issued in accordance with the Firearms Act 1968, (b) by virtue of being servants of the Crown and (c) by any other exemption or method of authorisation. [3295]

Mr. Michael: I have made no such estimate. Home Office guidance to the police in England, Wales and Scotland is that they should refuse applications for the grant of a firearm certificate for the applicant's protection or that of his premises. In Northern Ireland, there are approximately 11,000 people who hold certificates for firearms needed for personal protection. Information on the number of military personnel or other Crown servants currently authorised to retain service weapons for purposes of self-protection is not readily available.

Mr. Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many lives he estimates will be saved each year by the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997; and on what basis this estimate is made. [3297]

Mr. Michael: No such estimate can be prepared. The intention of the Act is to reduce the risk to public safety of another outrage such as that committed at Dunblane primary school by someone using a lawfully held handgun.

Mr. Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to place in the Library at monthly intervals a memorandum setting out the type and number of firearms which have been surrendered in accordance with the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997 but which have not been destroyed, the reasons for not destroying them, the person or body to whom they have or are to be transferred and the price which has or is to be paid for them. [3299]

Mr. Michael: No. Police forces will retain handguns surrendered to them until compensation has been paid. We will report the overall outcome of the surrender exercise to the House but obtaining monthly reports on the lines suggested would be a time-consuming and expensive exercise which would not be justified. There will be no sales of surrendered handguns.

Mr. Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the total cost of introducing and implementing the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997 and the present Firearms (Amendment) Bill. [3296]

Mr. Michael: The estimated total cost of implementing both the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997 and the Firearms (Amendment) Bill is £169 million. Of this figure, £138 million is the estimated cost of implementing the prohibition on higher-calibre handguns contained in the Act which includes the cost of compensation payments for these, for their accessories and the police and central administration costs. The remaining £31 million is the estimated cost of implementing the prohibition of small-calibre handguns envisaged by the Bill, including the cost of compensation payments for them and their accessories.

Mr. Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements have been made for the destruction of firearms surrendered to the police in accordance with the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997. [3298]

Mr. Michael: Those firearms surrendered under the terms of the 1997 Act will be destroyed in accordance with local police arrangements. These will vary from force to force. A few firearms may be retained for police training purposes, and some may be taken by museums for public display.

Deportations

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been deported from the United Kingdom in each of the last five years. [2977]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The answer to the question is given in the following list.

Persons removed[1] from the United Kingdom under the deportation process, 1992–1996

1992: 2,583

1993: 2,285

1994: 1,870

1995: 1,893

1996[2] 1,889.

[1] Includes voluntary departures after deportation action had been initiated.

[2] Provisional

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deportation orders have been signed by Ministers in each of the last five years. [2990]

Mr. O'Brien: The information requested is given in the table:

Deportation Orders signed by Ministers, 1992–96.

1992: 887

1993: 1,245

1994: 1,514

1995: 1,648

1996[1]: 1,864.

[1] Provisional.

Freemasonry

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he is going to implement the Home Affairs Select Committee's recommendations on freemasonry in the police and the judiciary, with special reference to a public register of freemasons. [3000]

Mr. Michael: The Government are currently considering the Home Affairs Committee report on freemasonry in the police and the judiciary, and have written to the Clerk of the Committee to say that a substantive response to the Committee's recommendation will be made by the end of August this year.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 June, Official Report, columns 90–91, if he will make a statement on the statistics published on 2 June, Official Report, column 91, in respect of the decline in the percentage of eligible adults who are registered to vote over the last 20 years. [3072]

Mr. George Howarth: It is not possible to make a direct comparison between electoral registration figures and estimates of the resident population, because they are not compiled on the same basis. The 1997 electoral register for Great Britain published in February showed the highest ever number of parliamentary electors registered to vote and saw the largest annual increase since 1987. We will seek to encourage this continuing improvement in electoral registration.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many juveniles aged 10 to 16 years were convicted in each offence group in each year since 1994. [2991]

Mr. Michael: Information from 1994 and 1995 is given in the table. 1996 data will not be available until the autumn.

England and Wales

Drug offences	471	600
Other (excluding motoring offences)	1,491	1,814
Motoring offences	158	175
Total Indictable offences	26,125	27,792
Summary non-motoring offences	8,046	10,393
Summary motoring offences	2,646	2,936
All offences	36,817	41,121

Tote

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current salary of the chairman of the Tote; when his appointment is due to end; and if he will make a statement. [2993]

Mr. George Howarth: The current salary of the chairman of the Tote is £103,108. Lord Wyatt's appointment is due to end on 30 June. We are taking steps to select a successor.

Police Forces (Chemical Agents)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which police forces in England and Wales use the MIBK chemical agent; [2769]

(2) if he will forbid the use of the chemical agent MIBK by police forces in England and Wales; [2770]

(3) what assessment he has made of representations from the Hertfordshire and Surrey Police regarding the MIBK chemical agent and its effect on foetuses. [2768]

Mr. Michael: My right hon. Friend does not plan to forbid the use of Methyl Isobutyl Ketone (MIBK) by police forces. MIBK is the solvent used as a carrying medium in CS canisters carried by officers in 17 forces in England and Wales. It has a wide range of uses, for example as a food additive and as a solvent in certain paints and varnishes. It is also found naturally in oranges, grapes and vinegar. A great deal is known about MIBK. The Department of Health has advised that it is an appropriate solvent to use in CS canisters, and it has been used by the Gendarmerie National in France for 17 years without any serious medical concerns.

There have been isolated reports published which suggest that at very high levels MIBK may affect unborn foetuses in lower mammals. These reports and the other available scientific evidence have been assessed by the Home Office Police Scientific Development Branch, the Department of Health and the Ministry of Defence. Their advice is that the scientific evidence does not indicate that MIBK is a human teratogen (that is to say, produces foetal abnormalities).

Police Training

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is standard procedure for United Kingdom police forces to provide firearms training systems that include training sequences designed to train police or other security personnel to fire on unarmed demonstrators; and if he will make a statement. [2775]

Mr. Michael: It would be entirely wrong for police forces not to train officers, or anyone else, to fire on unarmed demonstrators. The only circumstances in which police officers are trained to use a firearm against an unarmed person are training in the use of plastic baton rounds against people engaging in serious public disorder. Plastic baton rounds may be used as a last resort, where conventional methods of policing have been tried and failed or are unlikely to succeed if tried, and where the chief officer decides such action to be necessary because of the risk of loss of life or serious injury or widespread destruction of property where the damage may lead to serious risk of loss of life or serious personal injury. The police in the United Kingdom are trained to respond with the minimum force required to counter effectively any threat which they or members of the public come under. The use of force is governed by section 3 of the Criminal Law Act 1967 which provides that a person may use such force as is reasonable in the circumstances in the prevention of crime. If my hon. Friend has any evidence of any police force in the United Kingdom using such training sequences, I shall be grateful if she will let me have her evidence straightaway.

Alcoholic Drinks (Children)

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to prevent the sale of mislabelled alcoholic drinks to children; and if he will make a statement. [2974]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government are very concerned about the promotion and sale of certain alcoholic drinks to children. My right hon. Friend has set up a Ministerial Group to look at the issue. As its chairman, I am holding urgent talks with the drinks industry to demand swift action. If we are not satisfied with the response we are prepared to take action ourselves.

A range of children's icepop drinks was recently found to have been contaminated with alcohol. The producer says that this was accidental and has withdrawn the product from the market.

Police Officers

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the overall increase in the numbers of (a) police officers of all ranks and (b) police constables in England and Wales over the period 1 April 1996 to 31 March 1997. [2965]

Mr. Michael: Provisional figures from police forces show that total police numbers increased by 257 to 127,158 in the 12 months ending March 1997. Within that total, police constable numbers increased by 460 to 98,132. These increases are well below the 1,000 additional officers planned by the previous Government last year.

Justice and Home Affairs Council

Mr. Cawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Justice and Home Affairs Council held in Brussels on 26 and 27 May. [3978]

Mr. Straw: The Minister of State and I represented the United Kingdom at the Council. The main matters dealt with were as follows:

The Council agreed as "A" points, among other things, the Europol Drugs Unit budget for 1998, a joint action on co-operation on law and order and security, and a resolution on unaccompanied third-country national minors. Two actions covering Europol were also agreed, one covering how data will be stored and analysed and the other with the conditions of employment for Europol staff.

The Commission presented proposals for a future joint action on temporary protection for displaced persons. The proposals concern possible arrangements for European Union member states to respond in a co-ordinated way to situations where large numbers of refugees seek to enter the European Union from countries where events may have placed them in danger. In the light of preliminary discussion, the proposals will now be considered in detail in the appropriate working group.

There was discussion of a draft joint action aimed at providing an appropriately speedy mechanism for identifying and controlling new synthetic drugs throughout the Union. Establishment of such a mechanism was agreed in principle, although some work is still needed on the finer points of the text.

There was agreement in principle to a Protocol to the Europol Convention, which would lay down the extent to which Europol staff will benefit from certain privileges and immunities when carrying out their official functions. Minor amendments to the text are needed before the Protocol can be signed. This should be achieved fairly quickly.

Agreement was also reached on the second Protocol to the Convention on the Protection of the Communities' Financial Interests. This Protocol lays down steps to be taken by member states to criminalise certain acts of fraud and corruption against the Community budget and laundering of the proceeds of such fraud and corruption. The Protocol should be ready for signature in the near future.

The Presidency reported progress on the draft Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters. Although some progress has been made, a number of issues remain to be finalised by the working group.

The Presidency reported the outcome of their meeting with representatives of the United States Government on 14 April, under the terms of the Transatlantic Dialogue. It was agreed that broad themes for ongoing co-operation should concentrate on the fight against terrorism; implementing of the Caribbean drugs initiative; and prevention of drug smuggling.

The Commission gave a summary of work under way to combat trafficking in women and children. This included projects under a number of European Union Justice and Home Affairs programmes, as well as on the role of voluntary organisations working in the field.

The Council also took note of reports on the work of the task force on organised crime in the Baltic region. The task force, which involves Sweden, Germany, Denmark, Finland, the Presidency and the Commission, has taken a number of concrete measures, including the establishment of 24-hour national contact points, joint communications systems and actions against stolen motor vehicles and drugs. It will report to heads of Government in January/February 1998.

Two new European Union Conventions were signed by Ministers. One covered arrangements for the Service in Member States of Judicial and Extra Judicial Documents in Civil and Commercial Matters, including a Protocol covering the role in these matters of the European Court of Justice. The other was the Convention on the Fight Against Corruption involving Officials of the European Communities or Officials of the Member States of the European Union.

Meetings were held with Ministers of the associated Central and Eastern European countries and, separately, with Cyprus. These concentrated on asylum, and covered in particular the application of the safe Third Country concept, public attitudes to asylum, and the possibility of a parallel convention to the Dublin Convention. The Dublin Convention lays down the procedure for determining the state responsible for examining applications for asylum lodged in one of the member states of the European Communities. A parallel Convention would create a similar procedure for European Union member states and other contracting parties outside the Union.

Boards of Visitors Annual Report

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received a copy of the National Advisory Council for the Boards of Visitors Annual Report for 1996. [3987]

Ms Joyce Quin: We received an advance copy of the first annual report by the National Advisory Council on 29 May. It covers the period from 1 February 1996 to 31 January 1997. The report describes the varied and extensive programme of work carried out by the National Advisory Council on behalf of the Boards of Visitors. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library.

Animal Experimentation

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to introduce legislation to simplify and tighten the laws relating to animal testing wording on cosmetics labels in order to circumscribe ambiguous marketing. [2880]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: I have been asked to reply.

Requirements related to claims regarding animal testing of cosmetics will be tightened by regulation 4(4) of the Cosmetics Products (Safety) Regulations 1996, which will be enforced from 1 January 1998.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

ENVIRONMENT AND THE REGIONS

BSE Incinerators

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue guidance to planning inspectors to ensure that applications for BSE incinerators are not granted approval on appeal where they will destroy business confidence in a locality. [2477]

Mr. Raynsford: A number of recent planning applications have related to the construction of incineration facilities for the destruction of cattle slaughtered as part of the over 30 months scheme, rather than to those which show clinical signs of BSE for which provision exists already. Planning inspectors reach decisions on the basis of submitted evidence and published Government Planning Guidance. It is not appropriate to aim guidance solely at Planning Inspectors and on a single issue. Consideration is being given currently to whether there is a need to issue planning advice, to a wider audience, on facilities required to deal with wastes arising from the over 30 months scheme.

Elderly Care

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will review the funding allocated to Sefton Metropolitan borough council in the 1997–98 revenue support grant in respect of care of the elderly. [2480]

Mr. Raynsford: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Colchester (Mr. Russell) on 10 June 1997, Official Report, column 405.

Water Companies

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will include in his review of the abstraction licensing system new measures to ensure that water companies manage their aquifer resources sustainably; and if he will make a statement. [2789]

Angela Eagle: A key aim will be to ensure that the environment is properly protected, while providing fair and flexible arrangements for access to water resources by water companies to meet properly managed demands in a sustainable way. Amongst the possible measures which will be studied are economic instruments in relation to abstraction.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and Regions what specific measures he plans to achieve the Government's target of a reduction in CO_2 emissions by 20 per cent. from 1990 levels by 2010. [2678]

Mr. Prescott: We are reviewing the United Kingdom's Climate Change Programme looking at policies and measures across all sectors which could contribute to a 20 per cent. reduction in carbon dioxide emissions from 1990 levels by 2010. These include improvements in areas such as domestic and industrial energy efficiency, measures to tackle emissions from the transport sector as part of the integrated transport strategy, and a large increase in the amount of electricity generated from renewable sources and combined heat and power schemes. We shall produce a revised programme after Kyoto.

Domestic Waste

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment Transport and the Regions (1) if he will bring forward a comprehensive policy for domestic waste reduction, with special reference to control of packaging, reuse of materials and recycling, developed within local authorities and voluntary groups in partnership; and if he will make a statement; [3001]

(2) if he will review all current proposals for waste incineration plants to establish (a) the health and environmental risks of emissions and (b) the extent to which the implementation of policies to improve recycling of domestic waste might reduce the need for incineration. [3002]

Angela Eagle: The Government will be looking carefully at existing practice and policy in the field of waste management, to see how the contribution from recycling and other means of recovering value from waste can be maximised. At present, only 6.5 per cent. of household waste is recycled, and only 12 per cent. of municipal waste has some value recovered from it. Local authorities, voluntary groups, households and businesses all have a vital contribution to make in improving the sustainability of our waste management practices. Reduction of waste at source has an important part to play, and we hope to see the development of imaginative and effective initiatives to encourage it.

Current proposals for incineration plants will be considered, in the normal way, under the existing planning framework. We will keep under review the evidence on emissions from incinerators. It is essential that both new and existing incinerators meet stringent emissions standards to protect public health and the environment.

Non-domestic Rates

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to ensure that rateable businesses which temporarily cease to pay non-domestic rates due to the inability to trade for reasons of natural disasters are not treated as new accounts, which do not receive transitional relief, once they restart trading. [2824]

Mr. Raynsford: Properties removed from the rating list because they have been rendered incapable of occupation, for whatever reason, will necessarily require refurbishment or reconstruction, possibly to a higher standard than was the case before. We have no proposals to change the rule that such properties on re-entering the list should be denied transitional relief.

Council Tax

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many and what percentage of properties in Burnley are in (i) council tax band A and (ii) council tax band B. [2887]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested is as follows:

Burnley: Dwellings on the Valuation List as at 16 October 1996

Band A	Per cent. of total	Band B	Per cent. of total
26,358	65.7	4,084	10.2

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which 50 local authorities in England have the highest percentage of properties in (i) council tax band A and (ii) council tax band B; and which 50 local authorities have the lowest percentage in those bands. [2888]

Mr. Raynsford: I have today placed the information in the Library of the House.

Development (Stevenage)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his Department's policy regarding development west of Stevenage. [3058]

Mr. Raynsford: Planning Policy Guidance Note 2 states that releases of land from the Green Belt—like the proposals in Hertfordshire County Council's Structure Plan Review for development west of Stevenage—should take place only in exceptional circumstances. It will be for the County Council to respond to the recommendations of the independent Panel who conducted an examination in public of the Structure Plan Review proposals in March. My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minster will consider that response before taking a view on whether the case for any Green Belt releases has been made.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to meet the chief executive and chairman of the Housing Corporation; and if he will make a statement. [3059]

Mr. Raynsford: My hon. Friend the Minister of State for Local Government and Housing and I met the Chief Executive and Chairman of the Housing Corporation on 2 June. We had a fruitful and informative discussion about the work and role of the Corporation and we look forward to working together in the coming months.

Capital Receipts

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the current level of set-aside capital receipts derived from the sale of council houses for each local authority in Essex. [3010]

Mr. Raynsford: The amounts of housing capital receipts which were set aside by each local authority in Essex between 1990–91 and 1995–96 are set out in the table. However, individual authorities may have used these set-aside receipts to repay debt or in lieu of further borrowing, and so may no longer retain them in the form of cash and investments.

Contaminated Land

Ms Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what financial support he is giving in the current year to English local authorities and to the Environment Agency to meet capital costs of site investigation and remediation of contaminated land. [3183]

Angela Eagle: The Department of the Environment's Contaminated Land Supplementary Credit Approval programme, which has a budget of £14 million in the current financial year, provides support for capital costs incurred by English local authorities where they are responsible for the investigation or remediation of contaminated land. The programme also is able to provide support, in the form of additional grant-in-aid, to the Environment Agency where it is carrying out works to deal with water pollution from contaminated land.

The programme is aimed at tackling problems on sites owned by local authorities or those where authorities or the Environment Agency have responsibility to take action and cannot recover their costs from third parties. The Department operates an assessment and prioritisation procedure to ensure that the available funding goes to projects representing the greatest threat to health or the environment.

Some authorities have already been notified of support, where this is to meet on-going contractual commitments for projects funded in previous years. The Department of the Environment has today written to local authorities with successful bids for new projects and to the Environment Agency, notifying them of the financial allocations which are being made.

The following table sets out the allocations which have been made for the current financial year.

Gazumping

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will consider changes to the law to prevent gazumping and the late withdrawal from house purchase agreements. [2478]

Mr. Hoon: I have been asked to reply as responsibility for this topic lies with the LCD.

Work will shortly be under way across a number of Government Departments co-operating together which will look closely at the problem of gazumping and will lead to detailed proposals which will be in the interests of everyone involved in the sale and purchase of homes.

HSE Prosecutions

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the number of prosecutions which the Health and Safety Executive has brought against each local authority in England in the last three years; and how many have resulted in convictions. [3252]

Angela Eagle: In the three years from 1993–94 to 1995–96, the Health and Safety Executive prosecuted local authorities in England 44 times for 51 alleged breaches of health and safety law and secured 50 convictions. Details from HSE records are shown in the table. Figures for the year April 1996–March 1997 are not yet available.

These figures have not been validated.

There have, of course, been successive cuts to the HSE's grant-in-aid over recent years. Despite considerable difficulty, HSE has sought to meet these budget reductions with least harm to its key areas of work such as inspection and other field activity. Nevertheless, this can lead to heavy workloads associated with prosecution, discouraging it—especially when pitifully low fines from magistrates are taken into account. We are looking closely at this.

TRANSPORT

Rail Regulations

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will review the arrangements in place currently for claims handling in respect of claims against operators of rail services, with particular reference to the experiences of those persons submitting claims arising out of the Rickerscote rail crash at Stafford on 8 March 1996. [2862]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The arrangements for claims handling are governed by the Claims Allocation and Handling Agreement (CAHA), which is currently being reviewed by the Rail Industry Disputes Resolution Committee—a committee of industry representatives with an independent Chairman. Their proposals for changes to the Agreement will be submitted to the Rail Regulator for approval.

The Rail Regulator has initiated a separate review of third party liability insurance in relation to "privately owned rail vehicles" (defined as ones which are both owned by a company outside the licensing regime of the Railways Act 1993 and which are operated without the benefit of a lease or other agreement which transfers liability for the vehicle to a licensed train operator). He believes that it is in the interests of both the rail industry and third parties that a practical solution is found to the third party liability issues surrounding such vehicles. I understand the Rail Regulator intends to publish a consultation document later this year.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what public liability insurance is required of (a) Railtrack plc, (b) licensed operators of rail services and (c) other operators of rail services. [2861]

Ms Jackson: Licensed operators, including Railtrack, are required by the Rail Regulator to carry third party liability cover of at least £155 million, unless the Regulator agrees a lower figure in specific circumstances. In the case of companies providing services to the rail network who fall outside the Regulator's licensing powers, the level of third party liability insurance is a matter of commercial judgment. However, in the case of unlicensed contractors and sub-contractors, the Regulator has required licensed operators to provide, in their own insurance, cover for the difference between the contractor's insurance and £155 million.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what regulatory framework governs claims procedures in respect of the franchised railway companies; and what role the Rail Regulator has in respect of them. [2863]

Ms Jackson: All licensed railway operators, including Railtrack, are required by their licences to be a party to claims handling arrangements approved by the Rail Regulator. The railway industry established the Claims Allocation and Handling Agreement (CAHA) in early 1994. This continues to be the means by which all operators fulfil this licence obligation. The Rail Regulator is responsible for enforcing licence conditions.

Cycling

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what policies are being pursued by the Government to encourage cycling; and if he will make a statement. [3049]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 3 June, Official Report, column 165: to the hon. Member for Rotherham (Mr. MacShane).

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will meet the Rail Regulator to discuss whether adequate provision for the transport of cycles should be added to the obligations of train operators; and if he will make a statement. [3048]

Ms Jackson: The provision of capacity for the carriage of bicycles is a matter for the Franchising Director. Franchise operators are required by their Franchise Agreements to ensure that facilities are made available for the carriage of cycles on trains, so far as is reasonably practicable and subject to the availability of appropriate space on their rolling stock.

The Government are keen to see proper facilities for cyclists who wish to use the railway. We are currently reviewing the Franchising Director's Objectives, Instructions and Guidance. As part of our review, we will be considering what action the Franchising Director should take to encourage increased carriage of cycles on trains.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Credit Card Fraud

Mr. Richard Allan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to help businesses protect themselves against the losses caused by fraudulent credit card usage, with particular reference to telephone transactions. [2816]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: I understand that the banks are actively working with retail organisations to investigate methods of preventing all types of credit card fraud, including telephone transactions, and I strongly welcome this initiative.

Departmental Documents

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage and how many documents in 1996 she estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by her Department in full, (d) retained by her Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of, and (g) otherwise unaccounted for. [2506]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 11 June 1997]: No document falls due for transfer to the Public Record Office until it is 30 years old. The suitability of a document for selection for permanent preservation under the terms of the Public Records Act 1958 will be reviewed during that period.

The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested. To do so would incur disproportionate cost. However, in order to comply with their duties under the Act, departments are obliged to make arrangements for the safekeeping of their records, with a view to their possible selection and transfer to the Public Record Office and eventual release to the public. The general arrangements for extended closure or retention of public records are set out in Chapter 9 of the White Paper Open Government of July 1993 (CM.2290).

Lloyd's

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will review the decision of the last Government not to hold an independent judicial inquiry into the financial affairs of Lloyd's of London. [2962]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 11 June 1997]: I have given careful consideration to the question of an enquiry into the past problems of Lloyd's of London ("Lloyd's").

I recognise the hardship suffered by many underwriting members of Lloyd's ("Names") as a result of the losses at Lloyd's in the late 1980s and early 1990s, despite suggestions that for the most part, the losses can be attributed to a series of natural and man-made disasters. Moreover, a number of adverse rulings in the courts in the United States extended the scope of policies underwritten at Lloyd's to cover certain asbestosis and pollution risks which were never envisaged when the policies were written. The position was worsened by the so-called "LMX" spiral, where syndicates and reinsurance companies in the London Market repeatedly reinsured one another at a time of poor market conditions. The various losses have been thoroughly investigated in some 27 independent reviews. Under the circumstances, it seems unlikely that further investigations will identify any information beyond that which is already known.

Some Names have suggested that they were the victims of fraud. None of the independent loss reviews, or the investigations carried out by my Department and the Serious Fraud Office, has uncovered any evidence sufficient to justify the institution of proceedings. Although people have claimed to have such evidence, they have consistently refused to make it available to my Department for examination. Of course, if anyone provides any new evidence to me, I shall consider it very carefully and act accordingly.

There are a number of other practical considerations which I have taken into account.

As the Companies Acts are not relevant to the Society of Lloyd's, the only powers available to instigate an investigation are powers under the Tribunals of Enquiry (Evidence) Act 1921. This is an extremely costly procedure which cannot be justified on the basis of the hearsay evidence available to me and when previous investigations, conducted much nearer the time, failed to produce any proper evidence. I also note that, given the complexity of the Lloyd's market, it could take many years to complete the process. The alternative would be an administrative enquiry which would have no powers to require the production of evidence and would therefore have to rely on the goodwill of the people against whom the allegations have been made.

With regard to improved regulatory standards for the future, I note there have been substantial changes to the regulatory arrangements since the events in question. The Government will be considering further the future regulatory arrangements for Lloyd's but I am afraid I do not believe that a further enquiry into past events will materially help that consideration.

Under the circumstances, I do not, therefore, propose to establish a public enquiry.

VAT (Fuel)

Mr. Gummer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how she plans to counteract the effect on fuel consumption and emissions of the promised reduction in VAT on fuel. [2677]

Mr. Battle: We have already announced a review of policy to see what would be necessary and practicable to achieve 10 per cent. of UK's electricity needs from renewables by the year 2010. We have also announced a fundamental transport policy review and the need to promote energy conservation. We are reviewing the United Kingdom's Climate Change Programme, looking at policies and measures across all sectors which could contribute to a 20 per cent. reduction in carbon dioxide emissions from 1990 levels by 2010.

Unfair Dismissal

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for what reasons Her Majesty's Government are not bringing forward legislation to vary the qualifying period for unfair dismissal in the current session of Parliament. [2997]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government has no plans at present to change the qualifying period for unfair dismissal. The House of Lords has referred to the European Court of Justice questions relating to whether the qualifying period for unfair dismissal is indirectly discriminatory against women.

One Day Sales

Mr. Pike: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations her Department has received about one day sales; what plans she has to introduce regulations to control such sales; and if she will make a statement. [2279]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: My Department has received representations about one day sales from trading standards departments, chambers of commerce, the Association of Metropolitan Authorities and LACOTS (the Local Authorities Co-ordinating Body on Food and Trading Standards). I know they cause considerable concern and have instituted an urgent review. My officials will shortly be meeting representatives of LACOTS to discuss proposals they have made for tackling the problem.

Anglia Television

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what powers she has to order a fresh investigation into the dealings in Anglia Television shares by Lord Archer. [2994]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The Secretary of State may appoint inspectors if there are circumstances suggesting that an insider dealing offence may have been committed. As inspectors have already been appointed and reported in this case a fresh investigation would be appropriate only if new information came to light.

Parental Leave

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimates she has made of the numbers of people in one year who would be eligible for parental leave from their employer and of the average duration of such leave taken at any one time. [2968]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Research shows that many companies offer some form of parental leave to their employees, but we do not know how many people are covered by such arrangements in any one year or the average length of leave taken.

The Government intends to accept the Social Chapter including the Parental Leave Directive, which entitles employees to a minimum of three months' unpaid parental leave. The precise effects of the directive will depend on how it is implemented and we are not yet able to give estimates of the kind requested.

Beer Measures

Mr. Whitehead: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to introduce a standard pint measure mark as a requirement for glasses in which beer is served in public houses; and if he will make a statement. [3293]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: My Department is discussing this matter with interested parties and I hope to make a statement shortly.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Human Rights

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement about the extent to which her Department will carry out human rights appraisal, monitoring and evaluation in respect of all aid projects; and what account her Department will take of human rights reports in carrying out such appraisal, monitoring and evaluation. [2277]

Clare Short: My Department's goal is the achievement of human rights for all and we will adopt a human rights based approach to development which may include, political, social and economic rights.

DFID's distinct contribution will be to focus on those rights which are important for the eradication of poverty and the dignity of the disadvantaged and will be related to the circumstances of the country and its people.

Palestine and Sierra Leone

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the current level of United Kingdom aid to (a) the Palestine National Authority and (b) Sierra Leone. [3057]

Clare Short: UK bilateral assistance to the Palestinian National Authority is expected to total nearly £10 million in the current financial year, in addition to our one-sixth share of the European Union's 50 million ecu (£35 million) programme. Spending on aid to Sierra Leone in the UK financial year 1996–97 was an estimated £10.3 million and £1.4 million to UN organisations. Spending in the current financial year will depend on developments following the military coup on 25 May.

HEALTH

Rural Community Hospitals

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to review the role of rural community hospitals; and if he will make a statement; [2489]

(2) if he will make a statement on the policy of Her Majesty's Government with regard to rural community hospitals; and if he will make a statement. [2488]

Mr. Boateng: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the right hon. Member for Devizes (Mr. Ancram) on 2 June, Official Report, column 41.

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the bed-types on which the efficiency of hospitals is assessed, with particular reference to community hospitals; and what plans he has to increase the variety of bed-types used in that assessment; [2486]

(2) if he will list the criteria used by his Department in assessing the efficiency of hospitals, with particular reference to rural community hospitals. [2487]

Mr. Boateng: We measure the efficiency of health authorities, not hospitals, centrally. Activity is at present measured by the number of episodes of care, not the number or type of bed used. Where a health authority commissions inpatient care from a community hospital then this activity will at present be measured in the efficiency index for that authority.

Wythenshawe Hospital

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many patients resident at Wythenshawe Hospital on 1 June had been forced to remain in hospital for longer than their treatment required because suitable residential or day care support was not available; how many such patients had been resident at the hospital for up to (a) one week, (b) two weeks, (c) one month, (d) two months and (e) three months or more; and what estimate he has made of the additional financial costs to the NHS of these extended periods of care; [2554]

(2) how many patients admitted to Wythenshawe Hospital in (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97 had been forced to remain in hospital for longer than their treatment required because suitable residential or day care was not available for up to (i) one week, (ii) two weeks, (iii) one month, (iv) two months and (v) three months or longer; and what estimate he has made of the additional costs to the NHS of these extended periods of care. [2553]

Mr. Boateng: Health and social services are working hard across the country to resolve the difficulties caused by delayed discharges. In Manchester, the National Health Service trusts, health authority and social services are currently working together to understand the reason for delayed discharges and what they can do to resolve the problems this causes in terms of patient care and cost to the NHS. Officials have already been asked urgently to address this issue in terms of revised guidance on hospital discharge.

Patients in the South Manchester area are admitted to both Withington and Wythenshawe Hospitals and many from the Wythenshawe area are transferred to Withington as this is where the trust's rehabilitation and care of the elderly wards are located. The information given relates to both hospitals.

Length of wait (months)	Wythenshawe	Withington

[1] total wait = 242 days
[2] total wait = 1,437 days.

There are also 17 patients in the elderly mental health unit at Withington whose discharges are delayed. These people have been in-patients for between one and four months.

Neonatal Injury

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps his Department is taking to eliminate the damage caused by (i) Erb's palsy and (ii) brachial plexus injuries during the birth process; [2885]

(2) if he will list the incidence of (a) Erb's palsy and (b) brachial plexus injuries over the past 20 years. [2886]

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he plans to take to raise national awareness of Erb's palsy. [2878]

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce a programme (a) for the recording of every incidence of (i) Erb's palsy and (ii) brachial plexus injuries and (b) to raise the general awareness about Erb's palsy. [2930]

Ms Jowell: We are of course concerned about the damage to babies caused by Erb's palsy and brachial plexus injuries during birth. The safety of the mother and her unborn child are of paramount importance and childbirth is safer now than at any other time. Most cases of Erb's palsy and brachial plexus injuries arise spontaneously but are also considered to be influenced by misplacement of the shoulders in the birth canal. In recognition of this problem, the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologist has issued guidelines stating that every maternity unit should have agreed protocols for the management of shoulder malpresentations to minimise the risk of these conditions. We are not aware of any evidence to suggest that obstetric intervention contributes to the incidence.

Information on the number of finished consultant episodes of those patients admitted to hospital with primary diagnosis "Erb's Palsy" and "brachial plexus" injuries in NHS hospitals in England up to 1994–95 is available through HES (Hospital Episode Statistics) data and is shown in the attached table. The definition of a consultant episode is the period that a patient spends under the continuous care of a specific consultant in a specific health care provider. A hospital provider spell can comprise one or more consultant episodes. Hospital Episode Statistics will therefore pick up cases where the diagnosis was not made at birth and the baby was subsequently re-admitted. Information prior to 1989–90 recorded discharges and deaths and is therefore not directly comparable to Hospital Episode Statistics Data.

Carers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department (a) has commissioned and (b) plans to commission on the health problems facing carers. [2963]

Mr. Boateng: In recent years the Department of Health has funded a substantial body of research on carers and caring which has looked, inter alia, at the health of carers. The completed research has been published and widely disseminated.

Research currently in progress includes a major evaluative research study on community care for very dependent older people, which will investigate outcomes for both users and carers. A developmentally focused programme of research to develop and test new approaches to assessing community care outcomes for users and carers is currently being taken forward in collaboration with two local authorities.

Plans are well in hand to commission a major new research initiative on outcomes of social care for adults, to include outcomes for carers. It is expected that the research will include a study of outcomes of assessments of carers' needs, a study of carer outcomes over time, and a study to evaluate the impact on older people with dementia and their carers of early primary care intervention. A study of carer burdens and associated costs in dementia care over time is also planned.

Breast Implant Registry

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make the existing National Breast Implant Registry compulsory; and if he will make a statement. [3170]

Mr. Boateng: We have no plans at present to make the National Breast Implant Registry compulsory. Any changes to the policy on breast implants must await the report of the Independent Review Group set up recently by the Chief Medical Officer.

Insulin Pen

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make pen system needles for insulin dependent diabetics available on prescription; and if he will make a statement. [3171]

Mr. Milburn: We are currently considering whether general practitioners should be allowed to prescribe insulin injection pen needles on the National Health Service.

PRIME MINISTER

Interception of Communications Act 1985

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Prime Minister when the Annual report of the Commissioner appointed under section 8(1) of the Interception of Communications Act 1985 will be laid before the House; and if he will make a statement. [3812]

The Prime Minister: A copy of Lord Nolan's annual report for 1996 has been laid before the House today in accordance with section 8(7) of the Interception of Communications Act 1985. The confidential annex to the report has been excluded from that copy in accordance with section 8(8) of the 1995 Act. I am grateful to the Commissioner for his work in reviewing the issue of warrants and in providing assistance to the Tribunal as provided for in the Act. I note in particular the Commissioner's view that interception of both postal and telecommunications remains both an effective and an essential operation in the interests of national security and the economic well-being of the United Kingdom, and the prevention and detection of serious crime.

Intelligence Services Act 1994

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Prime Minister when the Annual report of the Commissioner appointed under the Intelligence Services Act 1994 will be laid before the House; and if he will make a statement. [3905]

The Prime Minister: A copy of Lord Justice Stuart-Smith's annual report, for 1996, has been laid before the House today in accordance with section 8(6) of the Intelligence Services Act 1994. The confidential annex to the report has been excluded from that copy in accordance with section 8(7) of the 1994 Act. I am grateful to the Commissioner for his work in reviewing the issue of warrants and authorisations, and in providing assistance to the Tribunal as provided for in the Act. I note that he was satisfied that the former Secretary of State had properly exercised his powers under the two sections of the 1994 Act.

DEFENCE

Service Personnel (Electoral Registration)

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the proportion and number of Service personnel on the electoral register who do not exercise their vote. [3201]

Mr. Spellar: My Department does not keep records of those Service personnel who exercise their rights to vote. This is a private matter for the individual. However, it is possible to ascertain the percentage of Service personnel who are registered to vote. As at 1 April 1997, 72.5 per cent. of Service personnel were so registered. Comprehensive measures are taken by the Services to ensure that all personnel are given the necessary information to enable them to register as Service voters.

NATO Enlargement

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy on the conclusions of the US Department of State report on the Enlargement of NATO, with particular reference to the responsibility for bearing the costs associated with improving NATO's regional reinforcement capabilities. [3180]

Dr. John Reid: The report to Congress by the US Administration on the enlargement of NATO provides a useful assessment of the relevant issues. In the current and foreseeable security environment, the Alliance will carry out the collective defence of both existing and new members and other missions by ensuring the necessary interoperability, integration and capability for reinforcement. On that basis, we do not expect NATO enlargement of itself to require significant changes to the capabilities already determined collectively by the Alliance as necessary to fulfil this strategy.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the financial cost to Britain of NATO expansion up to the year 2001. [3181]

Dr. Reid: No decisions have been taken on which countries will accede to NATO membership, when, or on what terms. The costs of enlargement, which will fall both on the countries which join and on the existing members of the Alliance and which will be incurred over a long period, will depend on those decisions. Subject to that caveat, we expect the costs of enlargement to be manageable.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to revise NATO's Strategic Concept agreed in 1991. [3182]

Dr. Reid: The Alliance's Strategic Concept, adopted by NATO's Heads of State and Government at their meeting in Rome in 1991, sets out the principal aims and objectives of the Alliance. Recognising the changes in the strategic environment since 1991, the Alliance has decided to examine the Strategic Concept to ensure that it is fully consistent with Europe's new security situation and challenges. NATO Foreign Ministers decided, at their meeting in Sintra on 29 May, to recommend to NATO's Heads of State and Government that they should decide the way ahead at their Summit in Madrid on 8 and 9 July.

Asbestos-related Diseases

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many compensation claims from former service men who suffer from asbestos-related illnesses have been turned down by his Department; [1896]

(2) what estimate he has made of the number of former service men suffering from asbestos-related diseases who are not covered by the change in the law in 1987 which gave service personnel the same rights as civilian employees to obtain compensation; [1897]

(3) how many cases of asbestos-related disease in former service personnel have been reported to his Department. [1898]

Dr. John Reid: Unfortunately, we have no means of knowing how many cases of asbestos-related disease in former service personnel have ever been reported to my Department. Nor does my Department hold data which could be used to estimate how many former service personnel may be suffering from such diseases. However, my Department's computer records on claims for compensation show that since 23 October 1986 we have been notified of 100 claims from former service personnel suffering from an asbestos-related illness due to their time in the Armed Forces. All of these claims for compensation had to be repudiated on the basis of Section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947 because they related to exposure before May 1987. The repeal of Section 10 in 1987, which first gave members of the Armed Forces the right to claim common law damages from their employer, was not retrospective.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will introduce a scheme to provide compensation for former service personnel and workers at defence installations who are suffering asbestos-related diseases as a result of exposure to asbestos during their employment. [3036]

Dr. Reid: I have asked for advice on the issue of compensation for former service personnel and civilian workers who are suffering from an asbestos-related disease as a result of exposure to asbestos during their employment with my Department; and I will consider what options to provide assistance may be available.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service (Welsh Language)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Attorney-General if the Crown Prosecution Service is subject to the requirements of the Welsh Language Act 1993 in the preparation of official reports and other publications. [3167]

The Attorney-General: The provisions of the Welsh Language Act 1993 do not apply to servants or agents of the Crown. They do not, therefore, apply to the Crown Prosecution Service. If a Crown servant or agent chooses voluntarily to adopt a Welsh language scheme, certain provisions of the Act concerning the preparation of a scheme and the investigation of alleged failure to comply with it do apply. The CPS is currently considering the preparation of a detailed formal scheme in accordance with the Welsh Language Board's guidance.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Attorney-General what was the cost of producing the bilingual 1996 annual report of the Mid-Glamorgan CPS. [3169]

The Attorney-General: The production cost of the bilingual Branch annual report for the Crown Prosecution Service Mid-Glamorgan was approximately £1,145.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Attorney-General if CPS branches in Wales have (a) sought and (b) been given professional advice by the Welsh Language Board about the grammatical accuracy of their official reports and other publications. [3168]

The Attorney-General: The hon. Member may be referring to the report of the Mid-Glamorgan branch of the Crown Prosecution Service. For this report a professional translator was used. Unfortunately on return of final proofs from the printers grammatical errors in the Welsh language version went uncorrected. However steps will be taken in future to seek to avoid any such re-occurrence.

Prosecution Arrangements

Ms Merron: To ask the Attorney-General what progress has been made in establishing the proposed review of the Crown Prosecution Service to which he referred in his written answer to the hon. Member for Salford (Ms Blears) on 21 May, Official Report, columns 73–74. [3979]

The Attorney-General: I am extremely pleased that Sir Iain Glidewell, a retired Lord Justice of Appeal, has agreed to chair the independent Review of the Crown Prosecution Service. He will be assisted by Sir Geoffrey Dear who retires at the end of this week as HM Inspector of Constabulary and (a person with management and organisational experience). Sir Iain proposes to commence work on Monday 16 June 1997. The Review will examine closely the internal structures of the Crown Prosecution Service, together with its policies and procedures. It will also consider ways to enable the Crown Prosecution Service to inform victims of crime about prosecutions decisions. The Review will have the following terms of reference:

Against the background of the decision that the CPS should in future be divided so that there are Chief Crown Prosecutors in all police force areas but within a national framework, to:

> examine the organisation and structure of the CPS, including the role of Headquarters, together with CPS policies and procedures and to consider whether and, if so, what changes are necessary in order to provide for the more effective and efficient prosecution of crime through local public prosecutors;

Without prejudice to the generalities of the above for that purpose, to:

- assess whether the CPS has contributed to the falling number of convictions for recorded crime;
- consider the manner in which the CPS influences its relationship with the police;
- consider the validity of criticisms that the CPS has led to unjustified "downgradings" of charges; and
- make and cost recommendations taking account of the need to operate within existing provision.

Sir Iain will aim to submit his report to me by the end of 1997. He will be seeking views and contributions from a wide range of sources including the Crown Prosecution Service and its staff as well as other criminal justice agencies and legal practitioners. The Report will be published.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Beef

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the NFU on the decline in the price of beef in the UK market. [3038]

Mr. Rooker: The matter of beef prices was most recently discussed when our right hon. Friend, the Minister, met the NFU on 3 June.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are his Department's forecasts of the amount of beef that it is expected will be held in intervention in each of the next four years. [3039]

Mr. Rooker: The extent to which UK beef will be purchased into intervention over the next four years will depend upon the state of the EU and UK beef markets and the rules governing access to intervention. The Department has not attempted to make forecasts over such a long timescale in this difficult area.

Organophosphates

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the environmental hazards associated with organophosphates. [2827]

Mr. Rooker: (a) The Ministry has commissioned no research into the environmental hazards associated with organophosphates (OPs).

(b) No veterinary medicine is authorised for use unless it meets stringent statutory criteria of safety, quality and efficacy. Safety includes safety to the environment. Applications for marketing authorisations must be supported by data which are assessed against the statutory criteria, including details of research.

Organophosphates are also used as agricultural pesticides. The marketing or use of a pesticide is approved only after thorough evaluation. No approval is given to pesticides that pose any unacceptable risk to human beings, non-target species or the wider environment.

Farmers (Forms)

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to simplify and rationalise the forms that farmers are obliged to complete. [3074]

Mr. Rooker: An Efficiency Scrutiny on Simplifying Farmers' Paperwork was conducted last year by my and the Welsh Office Agriculture Departments, with the assistance of working farmers. These recommendations are being implemented subject to compatibility with legislation and further views of the industry.

Abattoirs

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of approved abattoirs operating within England for each year from 1975 to date. [1572]

Mr. Rooker: At 1 June 1997 there were 381 licensed red meat slaughterhouses in England. The table below gives figures for each year from 1975 to 1996. Prior to 1993 red meat slaughterhouses in England were licensed not by MAFF but by local authorities. The figures for 1975 to 1992 have therefore been derived from records of State Veterinary Service visits during each year and are approximate.

Year	Numbers
1975	1,385
1976	1,320
1977	1,280
1978	1,145

[1] At the end of 1992, 455 applications had been made to MAFF for licences under the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992.

[2] As at 31 December.

Live Animal Transport

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to minimise journey times for animals between point of production and place of slaughter; and if he will make a statement. [1573]

Mr. Morley: The rules on journey times for live farm animals are laid down by EU Directive 91/628, as amended in 1995. We shall be seeking improvements, especially in relation to slaughter animals, when these rules come up for review in 1999. In the meantime we have made the new Welfare of Animals (Transport) Order 1997 to bring about overdue implementation of the 1995 EU rules and to enable controls on the welfare of animals in transit to be tightened. We will not compromise on these rules.

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to return the functions currently exercised by the Meat Hygiene Service to local authority control; and if he will make a statement. [1574]

Mr. Rooker: The Government has published for consultation Professor James's report into the establishment of an independent Food Standards Agency and will look carefully at the options for the future of the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) following the consultation exercise. Professor James himself states in his report that the arguments for dismantling the MHS and redistributing its responsibilities to Local Authorities are unconvincing, and that the new Agency should take over responsibility for the MHS.

Animal Health (Prosecutions)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reports his Department obtains regarding prosecutions by local authorities for offences under the Bovine Animals (Records, Identification and Movement) Order 1995; and if he will make a statement. [2805]

Mr. Rooker: The Department obtains quarterly reports from local authorities regarding prosecutions under the Animal Health Act 1981 for offences under the Bovine Animals (Records, Identification and Movement) Order 1995.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reports his Department obtains regarding prosecutions by local authorities for offences under the Heads of Sheep and Goats Order 1996; and if he will make a statement. [2806]

Mr. Rooker: The Heads of Sheep and Goats Order is made under the Animal Health Act 1981. Local authorities are required to inform the Ministry of any prosecutions taken in 1996, including by local authorities, are contained in the "Return of Expenditure Incurred and Prosecutions taken under the Animal Health Act 1981, and Incidence of Disease in Imported Animals for the Year 1996" made to Parliament under Section 80 of the Act. That shows no prosecutions taken in 1996 under this Order and we are aware of none so far this year.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reports his Department obtains regarding prosecutions by local authorities for offences under the SBM Order; and if he will make a statement. [2810]

Mr. Rooker: The SBM Order is made under the Animal Health Act 1981. Local authorities are required to inform the Ministry of any prosecutions taken under Orders made under the Act. Details of prosecutions taken in 1996, including by local authorities, are contained in the "Return of Expenditure Incurred and Prosecutions taken under the Animal Health Act 1981, and Incidences of Disease in Imported Animals for the Year 1996" made to Parliament under Section 80 of the Act. They are also reported in the monthly BSE Enforcement Bulletin, copies of which are available in the Library of the House, and the latest of which was sent by me to every Right hon. and hon. Member last week.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reports his Department obtains regarding prosecutions by local authorities for offences under the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995; and if he will make a statement. [2811]

Mr. Rooker: Local authorities have no enforcement responsibilities under the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995. These Regulations are enforced by the Meat Hygiene Service, an Executive Agency of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, created in 1995. Details of any prosecutions under these Regulations will be reported in the monthly Meat Hygiene Enforcement Report which was first published at the end of May 1997, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. A copy was also sent by me to all hon. Members last week.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reports his Department obtains regarding prosecutions by local authorities for offences under the Fresh Meat (Beef Control) Regulations 1996; and if he will make a statement. [2812]

Mr. Rooker: There is no statutory requirement for local authorities to notify my Department of prosecutions they make under the Fresh Meat (Beef Controls) Regulations 1996. However, the Ministry obtains as much information as possible on such prosecutions by other means, including the BSE Regulatory Forum which is attended by local authority representatives to co-ordinate enforcement activity, and from day to day contacts between local authorities and Ministry staff around the country. Details are reported in the monthly BSE Enforcement Bulletin, copies of which are available in the Library of the House, the latest of which was sent to all hon. Members last week.

Over 30 Months Scheme

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reports his Department obtains regarding prosecutions by local authorities for offences under the Over 30 Months Slaughter Scheme; and if he will make a statement. [2807]

Mr. Rooker: The Over 30 Months Scheme (OTMS) provides for compensation payments to producers for animals which can no longer be taken into the food or feed chain. There are no specific offences under the scheme for which local authorities have prosecuting responsibility although the movement of animals and the handling and processing of material arising from the scheme is governed by a range of more widely applicable legislation in which local authorities may have an enforcement role. No prosecutions have been brought by this Department for offences specific to the scheme and no central records are maintained from which local authority prosecutions under other legislation but relating to OTMS material could be extracted.

Beef Stocks Transfer Scheme

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reports his Department obtains regarding prosecutions by local authorities for offences under the Beef Stocks Transfer Scheme; and if he will make a statement. [2808]

Mr. Rooker: The Beef Stocks Transfer Scheme is a non-statutory scheme administered by the Intervention Board and enforceable on claimants by contract. The Scheme contains no offence provisions. Activities of companies engaged by the Board in connection with its administration responsibilities are covered by normal criminal law. To date we have had no reports of any prosecutions.

Calf Processing Aid Scheme

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reports his Department obtains regarding prosecutions by local authorities for offences under the Calf Processing Aid Scheme; and if he will make a statement. [2809]

Mr. Rooker: The Calf Processing Aid Scheme provides for payments to be made to slaughterers of eligible calves. There are no specific offences under the scheme for which local authorities have prosecuting responsibility although the movement of animals and the handling and processing of material arising from the scheme is governed by a range of more widely applicable legislation in which local authorities may have an enforcement role. No prosecutions have been brought by this Department for offences specific to the scheme and no central records are maintained from which local authority prosecutions under other legislation but relating to the scheme animals or material could be extracted.

BSE

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the locations and number per location of BSE diagnosed cattle landfill in Britain. [612]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 21 May 1997]: The Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee (SEAC), which advises Ministers on BSE, considered the issue of BSE and the environment in May last year, including the past disposal of the carcases of cattle affected, or suspected of being affected, with BSE to landfill sites. It considered that although the spongiform encephalopathy agent was not yet fully characterised, there was good evidence to believe that individual molecules were not infectious and that infectivity was associated with macro molecular agglomerations indeed possibly with tissue fragments, albeit small ones. On this basis it concluded

"it was unlikely that leachate from landfill sites would present a significant risk and there was certainly no justification for taking heroic measures to excavate sites, even those which had previously been used for material such as BSE-confirmed cattle".

The Environment Agencies took over responsibility for the safe regulation of landfill sites in April 1996, and under Part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 they monitor ground and surface water quality in the vicinity of licensed landfill sites to check for leachate contamination. The Agencies have carried out a qualitative assessment of all the sites concerned taking into account the number of carcases buried, the degree of containment and the proximity of water sources. They have also carried out a further more detailed quantitative assessment of a selection of sites which were judged from the qualitative assessment to be typical of those sites that appeared to be most vulnerable. The results show that potential risks to be very low, less than one in a million years.

The conclusions of the assessment are in line with the advice previously given to Ministers by SEAC. The Committee has been given the opportunity to comment on the quantitative assessment and has given it its endorsement. The Environment Agencies are now considering how best to publish the report, and related work, and aim to do so shortly.

A list of the locations of the sites concerned and numbers per location is below. No BSE suspects have been disposed of by landfilling since 1991, when sufficient carcase incineration capacity came on stream to process the number of cases that were coming forward:

Bio-aerosol Production

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the hazards of bio-aerosol production in and around commercial compost-making facilities. [2826]

Angela Eagle: I have been asked to reply.

My Department has commissioned and evaluated two research projects on composting which, amongst other things, considered bio-aerosol production: Composting of Waste Derived Fines Rejects at Castle Bromwich (CWM/081/93) and Municipal Waste Composting (CWM/074/93). The bio-aerosol results within the latter report were published separately as Airborne Micro-organisms Associated with Domestic Waste Composting (WSL-LR 808(MR)). These reports are available from the Waste Management Information Bureau, AEA Technology plc, F6 Culham, Oxfordshire OX14 3DB, telephone number 01235 463162.

Research funded by the Health and Safety Executive, which is sponsored by my Department, has also addressed bio-aerosol product from composting plants. The results were incorporated in two publications: "Domestic waste composting plants as sources of airborne micro-organisms", by B. Crook, R. P. Bardos and J. Lacey in Aerosols, their Generation, Behaviour and Applications, Proceedings Second Aerosol Society Conference, London: The Aerosol Society, 1988; and "Microbial emissions from composts made for mushroom production and from domestic waste" by J. Lacey, P. A. M. Williamson and B. Crook in Composting and Compost Quality Assurance Criteria, Luxembourg, Office for Official Publications of the European Community, EUR14254, 1992.

In addition, research being carried out for the Environment Agency, which is funded by my Department, has been monitoring bio-aerosol production at three commercial composting sites, although the results have not yet been published.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the Government's policy regarding restrictions on housing benefit for single claimants aged between 25 and 60 years. [2234]

Mr. Bradley: Measures to restrict housing benefit for single people under the age of 60 were inherited from the previous administration and the reduction in expenditure this entails form part of Departmental expenditure plans. We are reviewing those plans and will announce our decision shortly.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research has been commissioned, what estimates have been made by her Department and what information presented to her, regarding the costs per annum to the social security budget of the introduction of a minimum wage at (a) £3.50 an hour, (b) £4 an hour and (c) £4.40 an hour; and if she will make a statement. [2106]

Mr. Field: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend, the President of the Board of Trade on 9 June, Official Report, column 310.

Pension Scheme Surpluses

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has for legislation to prevent banks appropriating pension scheme surpluses in their annual accounts. [2090]

Mr. Denham: Any payment to employers of surplus pension fund assets can be made only where the following requirements are:-

the Inland Revenue approve the payment, which must satisfy paragraph 6(1) of Schedule 22 to the Taxes Act 1988.

the trustees must be satisfied that the payment is in the interests of the members.

where it is necessary for the employer's consent to be given, that consent shall be obtained.

all current and future pensions in payment, including those accrued in the past must be increased annually in line with the Retail Prices Index or 5 per cent. whichever is the less.

members have been properly notified of the proposal.

Members have the right to make written representations to the Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority (OPRA) against the trustees' proposal if they believe the statutory criteria have not been followed. OPRA will then decide whether the scheme has met the statutory conditions.

Failure to comply with the legislation lays the trustees open to sanction by OPRA, which can also order the employer to make restitution.

We have no plans to change these rules at present. We are currently evaluating the Pensions Act to see how it is working in practice.

Fuel (Direct Deductions Scheme)

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has for the direct deductions scheme for fuel. [2287]

Mr. Bradley: The Government is committed to creating a modern and efficient Social Security system. To this end and we are currently considering the direct payments scheme, including the report published in February following the review carried out under the previous administration. We will be making an announcement in due course.

Compensation Recovery Scheme

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the applicability of the Social Security (Recovery of Benefits) Act 1997 to settlements on and after 1 October 1997. [2846]

Mr. Bradley: It is intended that the provisions of the Social Security (Recovery of Benefits) Act 1997 will apply to all compensation payments made on or after Monday 6 October 1997 unless they are made in pursuance of a court order or agreement made before that day.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Somalia

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many DNA tests have been carried out by the British Embassy in Somalia on Somali nationals applying for family reunion in the past five years; and how many of those tests have shown that relatives were not related as claimed. [2978]

Mr. Fatchett: The UK does not have any diplomatic representation in Somalia. Somalia applicants for family reunion apply at the British Embassy at Addis Ababa. We have figures only for Somalia family reunion applicants who have been DNA tested at Addis Ababa from 1994 onwards. They are as follows:

Year	Number tested	Not related as claimed
1994	44	14
1995	37	13
1996	64	17
1997[1]	42	1

[1] So far.

Immigration

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average cost of processing a settlement application. [2866]

Mr. Fatchett: The average cost of processing a settlement application is £240.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications for entry clearance have been refused under the primary purpose rule in each of the past five years. [2869]

Mr. Fatchett: The number of applications for entry clearance wholly or partly refused under the primary purpose rule at Posts in the Indian sub-continent is as follows:

1992: 2,580

1993: 2,390

1994: 2,370

1995: 2,440

Definite figures for 1996 are not yet available. Figures for other posts are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Sudan

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Sudan. [3071]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have close historic links with Sudan. But we are concerned about the Government of Sudan's record in a number of areas, notably human rights and its prosecution of the civil war in the country. We look to the Government of Sudan to respond positively to the human rights concern most recently expressed by the international community at the UN Commission on Human Rights in April of this year. We continue to stress the need for a comprehensive negotiated settlement to the civil war.

Libya

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from President Nelson Mandela regarding (a) sanctions against Libya and (b) Lockerbie. [3066]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have received no such representations.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to review sanctions policy regarding Libya; and what assessment he has made of the resolution passed at the Organisation of African Unity summit relating to sanctions against Libya. [3067]

Mr. Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 10 June, Official Report, column 400.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement concerning events in Sierra Leone. [3068]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The military coup of 25 May which overthrew Sierra Leone's democratically elected government has not yet been overturned. The coup leaders have been joined by the Revolutionary United Front guerillas who have waged a long war against the Sierra Leone government. It is unclear who, if anyone, is now governing Sierra Leone. There have been no reports of fighting in Freetown since 3 June though sporadic looting continues. Food and fuel are in short supply. We have deplored the coup. We are in touch with regional powers involved in efforts to find a peaceful negotiated settlement in Sierra Leone. We shall continue to work for the return of constitutional order to Sierra Leone without further bloodshed.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has held with his counterparts in Commonwealth countries regarding Sierra Leonean participation in Commonwealth meetings and bodies. [3069]

Mr. Lloyd: I look forward to discussing Sierra Leone with others in the Commonwealth Ministerial Action Group (CMAG) when it meets in London on 10–11 July 1997. CMAG was created at the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting (CHOGM) in Auckland in 1995 and has since its inception considered events in Sierra Leone. It will report to this year's CHOGM in Edinburgh in October. Officials are in close contract with the Commonwealth Secretariat on events in Sierra Leone.

Burma

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from ASEAN member states regarding Burmese participation in the Asia-Europe summit meeting. [3070]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have had no approaches from ASEAN members making representations over Burmese participation in the Asia-Europe summit meeting.

EU (Freedom, Security and Justice)

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the subject areas where the Dutch presidency have proposed replacing unanimity with qualified majority voting in Freedom, Security and Justice (SN 539/97 c 40); and the numbers of the articles and paragraphs in which these proposals are made. [1973]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Treaty draft on an "area of freedom, security and justice" proposes a period of 3 years following the entry into force of the Treaty, during which unanimity should continue to apply to all subject areas currently covered by unanimity. On the expiry of this period, qualified majority voting would be extended to the following areas currently covered by unanimity:

Subject	Article	Paragraph
Internal borders	B	1
External borders	B	2a
Issuing of short term visas	B	2b (ii) and (iv)
Freedom of travel within the EU for third country nationals	B	3
Asylum policy and procedures	C	1
Temporary protection for displaced persons	C	2a
Illegal immigration and illegal residence	C	3b
Judicial co-operation in civil matters having cross-border implications	E	—
Administrative co-operation in areas covered by new Title	F	—

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the subject areas to which the Dutch presidency have proposed extending the co-decision procedure in Freedom, Security and Justice (SN 539/97 c 40); and the numbers of the articles and paragraphs in which these proposals are made. [1974]

Mr. Henderson: The draft Treaty text on an "area of freedom, security and justice" proposes a period of 3 years following the entry into force of the Treaty, during which consultation with the European Parliament, rather than co-decision, should continue to apply. The presidency continues to leave open the question of whether, on the expiry of this period, co-decision should apply to certain provisions of the Title.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Contact Sports

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to ban those identified as bearing the ε4 gene from participating professionally in contact sports; and if he will make a statement. [2119]

Mr. Banks: None. I am aware of the concern about the APO ε4 allele, which is sometimes associated with an increased risk of Alzheimer's disease. I am not aware of evidence which could justify banning those who have the APO ε4 allele from participating professionally in contact sports, even were there powers to do so.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to introduce mandatory genetic screening for those involved in contact sports to identify fighters genetically predisposed to suffer brain damage; and if he will make a statement. [2118]

Mr. Banks: None, although this is a very interesting question. However, I believe that the utmost attention must be paid to all sports where risk is a factor, and my Department encourages all governing bodies of sport to have the appropriate medical and safety regulations in place.

National Lottery

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proportion of income to the national lottery is generated in the Northern region. [2146]

Mr. Banks: Figures on the proportion of income to the national lottery by region are not held by my Department and are an operational matter for Camelot Group plc. I have therefore asked the Director-General of the national lottery, who is responsible for regulating the operation of the lottery, to write to my hon. Friend, placing copies of his response in the Libraries of the House.

Football (Racism)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he next plans to meet representatives of the Football Association to discuss racism in amateur football; and if he will make a statement. [2091]

Mr. Banks: I intend to meet the Football Association again in the near future to discuss many issues of importance to the game, including racism in football. This Government are determined to stamp out racism at all levels of the game.

Departmental Documents

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what percentage and how many documents in 1996 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of, and (g) otherwise unaccounted for. [2512]

Mr. Tom Clarke [holding answer 11 June 1997]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on 11 June 1997, Official Report, columns 450–51.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Parental Responsibility Orders

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many parental responsibility orders have been made; and how many parental responsibility agreements have been registered each year in England and Wales since the implementation of the Children Act 1989. [2155]

Mr. Hoon: The question concerns a matter which has been assigned to the Court Service under the terms of its framework document. I have therefore asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Huebner to Mr. David Kidney, dated 12 June 1997:

The Parliamentary Secretary of the Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of parental responsibility orders made and parental responsibility agreements registered each year in England and Wales since the implementation of the Children Act 1989.

The Children Act 1989 came into force in October 1991. The information you requested has therefore been collected since then and is as follows:

	Parental responsibility orders made	Parental responsibility agreements registered
1991 (October to December)	175	263
1992	2,492	2,951
1993	3,377	4,422
1994	3,893	5,506
1995	4,483	3,594
1996	5,687	3,586

(These figures are for county court, High Court and Family proceeding court private law Children Act cases).

Monmouth and Chepstow Magistrates Courts

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement about the proposed closure of (a) Monmouth and (b) Chepstow Magistrates courts. [2380]

Mr. Hoon: Magistrates courts are provided by the local paying authority for the use of the magistrates courts committee (MCC). Decisions concerning the future of any magistrates court are for the relevant MCC to determine.

The Lord Chancellor is involved in a dispute over a magistrates court only when there is an appeal by a contributing local authority against a proposed closure. The procedure for such appeals to set out in section 56 of the Justices of the Peace Act 1979. In the absence of an appeal the Lord Chancellor has no locus in the matter.

Decisions relating to (a) Monmouth and (b) Chepstow Magistrates Courts remain an issue for local management.

Court Injunctions

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the increase in the use by United Kingdom companies of court injunctions as a means of preventing criticism; what guidance he has given the courts on the use of injunctions in such a way; and if he will place a copy of such guidance in the Library. [2790]

Mr. Hoon: It is for the court in each case to determine whether an injunction would be the appropriate remedy.

Personal Injury Claims

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to use his powers under section 1 of the Damages Act 1996 to set a rate of return for use in personal injury claims. [2556]

Mr. Hoon: It is important that this power is used in a way which supports the interests of all parties. The Lord Chancellor will take note of the outcome of Wells v. Wells, Thomas v. Brighton Health Authority and Page v. Sheerness Steel, which have been granted leave of appeal in the House of Lords. He will consult interested parties before exercising the power.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to bring into force section 10 of the Civil Evidence Act 1995. [2555]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor will bring into force section 10 of the Civil Evidence Act following the outcome of Wells v. Wells, Thomas v. Brighton Health Authority and Page v. Sheerness Steel, which have been granted leave of appeal in the House of Lords, and consultation with interested parties on the use of particular discount rates for calculating awards in personal injury claims.

Civil Justice Review (Press Conference)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department for what reasons the Lord Chancellor briefed selected journalists on 6 June about the terms of his review of civil justice and legal aid reforms. [3294]

Mr. Hoon: As the review of civil justice and legal aid was the first major announcement made by the Lord Chancellor since his appointment, the Lord Chancellor decided that it was an appropriate opportunity for him to explain the terms of the review to the legal correspondents in person, and to answer their questions.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department who selected the journalists who were invited to the press conference which the Lord Chancellor held on 6 June about the terms of his review of civil justice and legal aid reforms. [3292]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the journalists who were invited to the press conference which the Lord Chancellor held on 6 June about the terms of his review of civil justice and legal aid reforms. [3290]

Mr. Hoon: The following journalists were invited to the Lord Chancellor's briefing on 6 June: Frances Gibb of The Times, Clare Dyer of the Guardian, Terry Shaw of the Daily Telegraph, Patricia Wynn-Davies of the Independent, Robert Rice of the Financial Times, Joshua Rozenberg of BBC Television News, Jane Peel of BBC Radio News and Marcel Berlins of BBC Radio 4's "Law in Action" programme.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the journalists who attended the press conference which the Lord Chancellor held on 6 June about the terms of his review of civil justice and legal aid reforms. [3291]

Mr. Hoon: The journalists who attended the Lord Chancellor's press briefing were Frances Gibb of The Times, Clare Dyer of the Guardian, Terry Shaw of the Daily Telegraph, Patricia Wynn-Davies of the Independent, Robert Rice of the Financial Times, Joshua Rozenberg of BBC Television News, Jane Peel of BBC Radio News, and Marcel Berlins of BBC Radio 4's "Law in Action" programme.

Radioactive Waste Disposal (Document)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 June, Official Report column 11, if he will place in the Library (a) a list of the titles of the 42 files on disposal of radioactive waste at the Hurd Deep and (b) a copy of the untitled document to which he makes exceptional reference. [2643]

Mr. Hoon: I am placing in the Library a list of the titles and dates of the 42 files referred to.

In drawing up the list it has become clear that there are three further files, beyond the one referred to in my Answer of 2 June (WA 11) that are not open to inspection because they are not yet 30 years old, and I apologise to the hon. Member for inadvertently misleading him on this point. The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority has already applied to the Lord Chancellor for all four items to be opened immediately, and they will be available in the Public Record Office after an Instrument under section 5(1) of the Public Records Act 1958 has been signed.

The Public Record Office has no power under that Act to make closed records, or copies of them, generally available before an Instrument opening the records has been signed.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Education Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of GDP was spent on education in (a) 1979–80, (b) 1983–84, (c) 1987–88 and (d) 1992–93; what is planned to be spent in 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [3035]

Mr. Byers: The information requested is as follows:

	Percentage of GDP spent on education (UK)
1979–80	5.1
1983–84	5.2
1987–88	4.8
1992–93	5.2

Projected expenditure on education in 1997–98 will amount to some £38 billion but accurate figures cannot be calculated until outturn information is available. In 1996–97 the proportion spent on education is estimated to be 4.9 per cent.

Mr. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact of his improvement targets on the percentage of GDP to be spent on education over the planning period; and if he will make a statement. [3032]

Mr. Byers: The Government are committed over the course of the Parliament to raising the proportion of national income spent on education as it decreases the proportion spent on the costs of economic and social failure.

Unemployment

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for South-East Cambridgeshire (Mr. Paice) on 3 June, Official Report column 151, if he will make a statement on the number of 18 to 24-year-olds registered as unemployed, and the estimate of the number of 18 to 24-year-olds by the ILO Labour Force Survey; and what action he proposes in respect of these statistics. [3076]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The latest LFS figures are for Winter 1996–97 and show the number of ILO unemployed 18 to 24-year-olds in the UK to be 498,500. The most comparable claimant count figures are for January 1997, and stood at 479,000. The Government's commitment, in its New Deal programme, is to give opportunities for work, education or training to 250,000 18 to 24-year-olds who have been unemployed for more than six months. The New Deal is also part of a wider programme aimed at helping people on welfare—including those on other benefits as well as the claimant unemployed—back into work.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

European Legislation

Mr. Lidington: To ask the President of the Council if she will list the items of EC legislation and other relevant documents which (a) were scrutinised by the Select Committee on European Legislation in the last Parliament and recommended for further debate but have not yet been considered either by European Standing Committee A or B or on the Floor of the House and (b) have not yet been scrutinised by the Select Committee on European Legislation; and if she will make a statement. [3179]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: Listed are the five items recommended for debate by the Select Committee on European Legislation in the last Parliament for which the debate is still outstanding.

Committee/floor	Document reference	Subject
European Standing Committee A (with a Floor debate recommendation)	6177/94	Proposal for a Council Directive concerning the quality of bathing water
European Standing Committee A	5947/94	Proposal for a Council Directive amending Directive 79/489/EEC on the conservation of wild birds
European Standing Committee B	6748/91 and 6294/92	Proposal for a Council Directive on the approximation of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions of the member states on advertising of tobacco products
European Standing Committee B	9098/94	Proposal for a Council Directive on harmonisation of the main provisions concerning export credit insurance for transactions with medium and long-term cover
European Standing Committee B	9141/94	Proposal for a Council Directive on the safeguarding of employees' rights in the event of a transfer

A total of 180 items of business, including some outstanding since the last Parliament, remain to be considered by the Select Committee on European Legislation. I have asked the Clerk of the Committee to send the hon. Member details of remaining business before the Committee and place a copy in the Library of the House. I hope that both the Select Committee on European Legislation and the European Standing Committees will be re-nominated soon.

Defibrillators

Dr. Harris: To ask the President of the Council how many defibrillators are available in the Palace of Westminster; and if she will list their locations, indicating which are (a) automatic, (b) advisory and (c) semi-advisory. [3220]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: This is not a matter for me but I have asked the Serjeant-at-Arms to write to the hon. Member.

WALES

BSE

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the BSE situation in Monmouthshire. [2528]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The BSE epidemic is in decline in Monmouthshire and throughout Wales. The number of new cases has fallen sharply: separate figures are not available for Monmouthshire, but the number of reported cases in 1996 for Wales was about 50 per cent. below that for 1995.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the Government's plans to compensate beef farmers in Monmouthshire as a result of the BSE crisis. [2527]

Mr. Griffiths: Producers in Monmouthshire and elsewhere have received direct financial aid—amounting to some £250 million for the UK as a whole—since the start of the beef crisis. In addition to this, significant sums are being spent on expanded intervention arrangements, on the calf processing scheme and on the over 30-months scheme.

Health Service

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the role of financial targets in assisting NHS trusts to provide a professional health care service. [2823]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Financial targets are an important element in ensuring that a professional healthcare service is provided most efficiently within the resources available.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the financial position of Welsh (a) health authorities and (b) trusts at the end of the financial year 1996–97. [2818]

Mr. Griffiths: Until the annual accounts of both health authorities and NHS trusts are received it is not possible to make an accurate assessment of their financial positions.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of the (i) Welsh health authorities and (ii) Welsh NHS trusts have been reported to him as being likely to be in deficit in (a) 1996–97 and (b) 1997–98; and what are the arrangements for carrying over of deficits. [2819]

Mr. Griffiths: Subject to the final accounts position, health authorities have indicated a financial out-turn as follows:

Health Authority	Forecast Surplus/(Deficit) 1996–97
Morgannwg	(1.370)
Dyfed Powys	(7.394)
Gwent	(1.440)
Bro Taf	(8.029)
North Wales	(6.541)

The table summarises the latest returns from health authorities of forecast out-turn based on an income and expenditure basis, which attempts to calculate the total resource costs incurred in any one financial year. The figures are provisional. All authorities succeeded in meeting the requirement to remain within their notified cash limits for the financial year 1996–97. Cash limits reflect the actual liquidity requirements of authorities to meet liabilities as they arise.

The following trusts are reporting a deficit position for 1996–97:

Morriston—this trusts' financial performance was debated by the Welsh Affairs Committee report and a copy of its findings is available in the Library of the House.

Carmarthen—this was a planned deficit and the trust achieved a year on year break-even position.

North Glamorgan—this was due to a technical adjustment in relation to an accounting treatment for early retirements.

Pembrokeshire—this was due to a technical adjustment in relation to an accounting treatment for early retirements.

Morriston NHS Trust is in the process of drawing up a recovery plan to be agreed by commissioners and will be expected to return to a balanced position within agreed timescales. It is too early in the financial year to forecast the likely out-turn for 1997–98.

As health authorities deal with cash figures the carrying over of deficits is not applicable. However, the present arrangement for the carrying over of deficits for trusts is that they are required to devise a recovery plan, in conjunction with their respective commissioners, and would be expected to return to a balanced position within an agreed timescale.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the long-term financial position of Welsh (a) health authorities and (b) NHS health trusts. [2820]

Mr. Griffiths: The Government is currently reviewing the financial position of the NHS in Wales and we will be in a better position to do so when the audited accounts have been received. We have announced a review of the number and configuration of NHS trusts to identify a more effective way of delivering services and this will realise considerable savings. We are also reviewing the formula for distributing resources to health authorities.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will institute an annual investigation into the effectiveness of financial targets in the NHS as a means of highlighting relevant trends in financial performance. [2821]

Mr. Griffiths: The effectiveness of financial targets and trends in financial performance in the NHS are subject to continuous review.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the requirement for NHS health trusts in Wales to break even, year on year, allows a trust with a surplus in one year to budget for a deficit in the following year. [2822]

Mr. Griffiths: Yes. However, should a trust forecast a year end deficit, for which they did not have sufficient reserves, it would be necessary to prepare a recovery plan which would be formulated in conjunction with commissioners. The trust would be expected to return to a balanced position within an agreed timescale.

Council Houses

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to release the controls on the use of receipts from council house sales; what estimates he has made of the number of extra jobs that will be created as a result; and if he will make a statement. [3148]

Mr. Win Griffiths: We have introduced the Local Government Finance (Supplementary Credit Approvals) Bill. When enacted, this will allow us to release resources in the form of Supplementary credit Approvals. We will consult local authorities in Wales on the timing and phasing of the release, and the targeting of resources before taking final decisions on these issues. Until that stage is reached, I cannot estimate the effect of this new investment on job creation.

Casualty Units

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he plans to take to increase staffing of trust hospital casualty units on Saturday evenings and early Sunday mornings; and if he will make a statement. [3150]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Trusts have been made aware of our requirements to provide high quality services including the need for patients to be assessed within 10 minutes of their arrival at accident and emergency or casualty departments. It is for respective trusts to consider how best to deploy their staffing resources to meet requirement.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the total numbers of (i) pupils and (ii) schools and (b) the total amount of public expenditure involved in the assisted places scheme for each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement on the total expected savings from the abolition of the assisted places scheme in Wales. [3172]

Mr. Hain: The position over the last five years is as follows:

Financial year	Number of pupils	Number of schools	Total cost £
1992–93	700	8	2,457,230
1993–94	691	8	2,621,261
1994–95	720	8	2,771,504
1995–96	726	8	2,904,845
1996–97	887	14	3,462,320

Projected expenditure for 1997–98 is £4.5 million, for 1998–99 £5.1 million[1] and 1999–2000 £5.7 million[1]. Subject to Parliamentary approval of the Education (Schools) Bill, total estimated savings once the scheme is phased out will amount to some £5.7 million per annum.

[1] Planned provision for 1998–99 and 1999–2000 will be subject to review in the forthcoming public expenditure survey.

Nursery Education

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) three-year-olds and (b) four-year-olds, received state-funded nursery provision in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement on the amount of extra expenditure which would be needed to meet total demand for state funded nursery provision for (i) all three-year-olds and (ii) four-year-olds. [3173]

Mr. Hain: The information requested is as follows:

At January	3-year-olds[1]	4-year-olds[1]
1995–96	18,600	35,251
1994–95	19,375	34,638
1993–94	18,779	34,165
1992–93	18,258	34,822
1991–92	17,942	33,866

[1] Includes full and part time pupils in maintained nursery, primary and special schools.

Specific funding of £42.5 million is being provided in 1997–98 to enable all four-year-olds to receive education of at least five half day sessions per week. We will consult on targets for education for three-year-olds in the context of the forthcoming White Paper on education.

Class Sizes

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the total new expenditure needed to (a) reduce all class sizes for five, six and seven-year-olds to 30 or under and (b) reduce all class sizes for all school children to under 30; and if he will make a statement. [3174]

Mr. Hain: We will consult the Welsh Local Government Association and Local Education Authorities in Wales in the context of the forthcoming White Paper on Education on implementation of our policy of reducing infant class sizes to 30 pupils or less. That consultation will include an assessment of costs which will vary from area to area. Reduction of all classes to under 30 is not under consideration.

SCOTLAND

Carers

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the recommendations in the Carers National Association's report, "Still Battling? The Carers Act One Year On"; and what action he will take to ensure that carers are fully informed of their rights. [2986]

Mr. Galbraith: The report was launched on Monday 9 June as part of the 1997 National Carers Week. We will study the report carefully and consider what action is necessary.

Registers (Access Charges)

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for what reasons the Registers of Scotland have increased the cost of access to (a) the sasine search sheets and (b) the on-line database for the register of inhibitions. [2571]

Mr. McLeish: The fee contained in the Fees in the Registers of Scotland Order 1995 (S.I. 1995 No. 1945) for the searching of any Register of Sasines search sheet affecting one property is £7. There has been no increase in this fee. Private searchers enjoy special arrangements whereby a "badge" fee enables each searcher to have access to the search sheet between 08.30 and 16.30 each day. This preferential arrangement permits a "badgeholder" to make multiple searches during this time. A daily "badge" fee of £30 was set in 1993 and was based on the £5 fee for a search of any one search sheet contained in the 1991 Fees Order. The 1995 Fees Order increased this £5 fee to £7 and the daily "badge" fee, as part of a catch-up exercise, has been increased, pro rata and with effect from 1 May 1997 from £30 to £42.

The fee contained in the Fees in the Registers of Scotland Order 1995 (S.I. 1995 No. 1945) for searching each group of six names or less in the Register of Inhibitions and Adjudications is £7. Historically, the fee for on-line searching of this computerised Register has borne no relation to the search fee as set up in successive Fees Orders. Over the years there has been a gradual catching-up exercise underway. Prior to 1 May 1997 the fee for searching each group of six names or less was £0.94, an 86 per cent. discount on the fee as set out in the 1995 Fees Order. With effect from 1 May 1997 the discount has been reduced to 50 per cent. The new fee of £3.50 for searching each group of six names or less in now related to the 1995 Fees Order.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research has been commissioned and what estimates have been made by his Department and what information presented to him, regarding the costs per annum to the total Scottish Office budget of the introduction of a minimum wage at (a) £3.50 an hour, (b) £4 an hour and (c) £4.40 an hour; and if he will make a statement. [2111]

Mr. Wilson: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on Monday 9 June 1997, Official Report, column 310.

Urban Aid Programme

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to increase the funds available for the urban aid programme. [2284]

Mr. Chisholm: The Government are committed to remaining within the existing Public Expenditure totals for 1997–98 and 1998–99, and any increase in funds for one programme could therefore be funded only from reductions in another. Over the coming months, Ministerial colleagues and I shall be reviewing all the financial priorities within the Secretary of State's expenditure programmes. Decisions on any transfers of resources will be taken following the review of priorities.

Federation Councils on Alcohol

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning the future of Argyll and Bute Federation Councils on Alcohol; and if he will make a statement. [2853]

Mr. Galbraith: Representations have been received from the Director of the Federation about the organisation's financial difficulties. However, this is a service issue which requires to be resolved at local level by the statutory and non-statutory agencies in the Argyll and Bute area.

Environment Protection Agency (VAT)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to enable the Scottish Environment Protection Agency to reclaim VAT; and if he will make a statement. [2689]

Mr. Chisholm: VAT refunds are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus Aureus

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of MRSA have been recorded in each health authority district in Scotland in each of the last 12 months. [2980]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 11 June 1997]: Information on the total number of cases of infection or colonisation with methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus (MRSA) is not collected centrally in Scotland.

The Scottish Centre for Infection and Environmental Health receives isolates submitted voluntarily by hospitals in Scotland. The following table shows the numbers of isolates received for the 12 months to May 1997 for each Scottish health board area. Several isolates may be taken from a single patient on one occasion or at different times.

Deportation

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons awaiting deportation have been detained at (a) HM Prison Greenock and (b) other prisons in each of the past seven years; what was the average time spent in such detention; and if he will make a statement. [2765]

Mr. McLeish: Detailed statistics concerning persons detained before 1995 are not available within the Scottish Prison Service. The number of persons detained in (a) Greenock and (b) other prisons in Scotland under the Immigration Act since 1995 are detailed in the table. The average period of time spent in detention by persons awaiting deportation is 54 days.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Health Board Headquarters (Armagh)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of the gardens at the headquarters of the Southern Area Health Board at Tower Hill, Armagh City. [2143]

Mr. Worthington: The total cost of landscaping, including the courtyard gardens, within the Tower Hill site was £28,347.

Acute Hospitals

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the acute hospital rationalisation proposals will be implemented. [1522]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 11 June 1997]: Teams have been set up in the Royal Group of Hospitals Trust and the Belfast City Hospital (BCH) Trust to take forward the decisions arising out of the Acute Hospitals Reorganisation Project. The process of implementation has already begun but in view of the inter-relationship of many of the specialties involved and the complexities arising from this, implementation will be on a gradual basis and is likely to take a couple of years. As promised by the Secretary of State earlier, I am presently looking again at the decision to centralise maternity and associated services in the BCH Tower Block. This is also the subject of a judicial review.

Departmental Running Costs

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement about the 1997–98 running cost limit for the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments. [3771]

Mr. Murphy: The gross running cost limit for 1997–98 for the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments is £783,171,000. There is also a net running cost limit of zero for the Land Registers of Northern Ireland. Details of the provision for individual Northern Ireland Departments are set out in the Northern Ireland Estimates published today and are available in the Library.

Police Authority

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements have been made for the appointment of a new Police Authority for Northern Ireland. [3813]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Police Authority has a vital task to perform in securing the maintenance of an adequate and efficient police force. It also has a very important role to play in enhancing the relationship between the police and the public it serves.

I have therefore appointed 17 members of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland for a term of three years which will begin on 29 June 1997. In making the appointments I have, as required by the Police Act (NI) 1970, consulted organisations and persons representative of the community in Northern Ireland. In addition, and in accordance with the Guidelines issued by Sir Leonard Peach, the Commissioner for Public Appointments for Northern Ireland, applications for appointment were invited by advertisements in the Northern Ireland press. As a result, the Authority widely represents the community and continuity is provided by the continuing service of several individuals for a second term.

TREASURY

Monetary Policy

5. Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to ensure that the Government's monetary policy objectives are met. [1589]

Mr. Gordon Brown: Last month I announced reforms which gave the Bank of England operational responsibility for setting interest rates. Today, I have written to the Governor setting out the Bank's remit and how it will be held accountable for meeting its target.

To meet the Government's objectives of high levels of growth and employment, we need consistently low inflation. That is why I am today announcing a precise and rigorous framework to achieve the Government's inflation target of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

Our new long term framework will ensure that if inflation is 1 per cent. higher or lower than this target, an open letter will be sent by the Governor to the Chancellor so that the public is fully informed of why the divergence has occurred and what steps will be taken in response.

I have arranged for the letter which I have sent the Governor today to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Cyclical Social Security

19. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the causes of the predicted rise up to 2001–2 in cyclical social security as set out in table 4.6 in the most recent Red Book; what assessment he has made of the implications; and if he will make a statement. [1604]

Mr. Darling: The spending plans inherited by the Government for the period up to 1999–00 assume increases in Cyclical Social Security expenditure from future inflation upratings and future growth in the number of Income Support claimants and the average amounts of benefit paid to them. They are partly offset by an assumption of falling unemployment. Beyond 1999–00 the projections allow for additional growth in expenditure above what would be expected from inflation upratings, in line with that observed in the past. The Government are currently reviewing these plans and will announce the outcome in the Budget.

Unemployment Figures

21. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the methodology used by the Government for calculating the level of unemployment. [1606]

Mrs. Liddell: My hon. Friend's interest in methodology is well placed and shared by the Government and the Government have begun a process of consultation which reflects the Employment Select Committee's recommendations for more prominence to estimates for the labour force survey.

On 8 May the Office for National Statistics launched a process of consultation with users about the dissemination and presentation of labour market statistics. The Director of the Office for National Statistics is responsible for deciding the form, the coverage and timing of release of statistics by his office, which is committed to a wide-ranging consultation.

The consultation reflects the Employment Select Committee recommendation to give more prominence to estimates from the labour force survey.

The Government are committed to ensuring the widest possible acceptance of these statistics, and the ONS will make public the conclusions of the consultation.

Manufacturing Investment

22. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will next meet representatives of manufacturing industry to discuss ways in which investments in new manufacturing enterprises can be encouraged. [1607]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: Treasury Ministers regularly meet representatives from British industry. We are keen to discuss ways of improving investment in new companies, and industry more generally.

Local Tax Offices

23. Mr. Key: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the reorganisation of local tax offices by the Board of Inland Revenue. [1608]

Dawn Primarolo: Since 1993 the Inland Revenue has been carrying out a 10 year Programme to reorganise its whole network of local offices. Firm plans exist for the period up to mid 1998 and proposals for the remaining period are currently being considered by the Board of Inland Revenue.

Economic and Monetary Union

24. Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place the issue of the single currency and the protocol on the third stage of economic and monetary union on the agenda for renegotiation at the intergovernmental conference at Amsterdam. [1609]

Mr. Darling: Economic and monetary union (EMU) is not on the IGC agenda. I have no intention of reopening the protocol which protects our right to choose whether to join the third stage of EMU.

Bank of England

25. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer with what frequency he plans to meet or communicate with his nominated members of the Bank of England's new monetary policy committee. [1610]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I have no plans to meet or communicate with the four new members of the monetary policy committee in their official capacity. The Treasury will be represented at the committee's meetings in a non-voting capacity.

Unemployment

26. Mr. Paul Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to reduce youth and long-term unemployment. [1611]

Mr. Darling: We will give 250,000 under 25s opportunities for work education and training, and encourage employers to take on those unemployed over two years. Further details will be announced in my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's Budget.

39. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about his proposals to reduce youth and long-term unemployment. [1624]

Mr. Darling: We will give young people aged under 25 opportunities to work, using a £60 per week rebate to employers, to enter full-time education and training, and to do work in the voluntary sector or in a new Environmental Task Force. We aim to help 250,000 young people move from welfare to work. We will also help employers to take on those unemployed over two years with a £75 a week subsidy. An advisory task force, chaired by Sir Peter Davis, will advise on key issues of programme design and implementation, and mobilise the support of employers. Further details will be announced in the Chancellor's Budget.

Inflation

27. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the basis on which he will determine his next inflation target. [1612]

Mrs. Liddell: I refer to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor to the hon. Members for Cambridge (Mrs. Campbell) and for Bradford, South (Mr. Sutcliffe) earlier today.

Windfall Tax

28. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of the proposed windfall tax on prices charged by the utilities to their consumers. [1613]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will be considering a wide range of factors in reaching his view on the windfall levy. He will be consulting the regulators and will announce details of the levy in his Budget statement.

34. Dr. Fox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the representations he has received from the National Association of Pension Funds regarding the windfall tax. [1619]

Mr. Robinson: Treasury Ministers are treating representations from companies and other bodies as confidential.

35. Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the operation of the windfall profits tax. [1620]

Mr. Robinson: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will announce details of the windfall levy in his Budget statement.

38. Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what measure of profits he will base the windfall tax. [1623]

Mr. Robinson: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will announce details of the windfall levy in his Budget statement.

Private Finance Initiative

29. Mrs. Osborne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to promote private finance projects. [1614]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: I announced an immediate review of the machinery of PFI, by Malcolm Bates, the Chairman of Pearl Group and a former member of the Private Finance Panel. That will streamline and improve the process. I have also scrapped the requirement for universal testing of all projects.

Capital Receipts

30. Mr. Syms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the impact of an increased release of local authority capital receipts on the public sector borrowing requirement. [1615]

Mr. Darling: The release of capital receipts will be phased to meet the requirements of prudent management of the public finances, including having regard to the effect on the PSBR.

Exchange Rate

31. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the change in the value of the pound against the basket of international currencies relative to June 1996. [1616]

Mrs. Liddell: Since June 1996 the pound (on its trade weighted index) has risen by around 16 per cent. The Government want a stable and competitive pound over the medium term, consistent with its objective of price stability.

Public Expenditure

32. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much public expenditure has been increased to date by the policy changes initiated by the present Administration. [1617]

Mr. Darling: There have been no increases to date in the planned level of public expenditure.

VAT (Fuel)

33. Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his plans to reduce VAT on domestic fuel. [1618]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government have a manifesto commitment to cut VAT on domestic fuel and power to 5 per cent.

Youth Unemployment

36. Mr. Fabian Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what contribution Her Majesty's Treasury has made since 1 May towards combating youth unemployment. [1621]

Mr. Darling: The Treasury has been closely involved with other Government Departments in drawing up proposals to help 250,000 people aged between 18 and 25 move off benefit and into work. Further details will be set out in the Chancellor's Budget.

Interest Rates

37. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what mechanisms are in place to ensure that the needs of businesses/exporters in particular are taken into account in the setting of interest rates. [1622]

Mrs. Liddell: In setting interest rates, the monetary policy committee of the Bank of England will be able to draw on the information gained from business surveys, and the Bank's network of regional agents which cover the whole of the United Kingdom. The Bank's agents have widespread contacts with companies, both large and small, and other organisations covering all sectors of the economy.

Customs and Excise (Freemasons)

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures are in place to ensure that officials of HM Customs and Excise declare their membership of secret societies, with special reference to the Freemasons. [1910]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 6 June 1997]: Customs and Excise publish internal guidance for all staff on personal conduct. This is based on the Civil Service Management Code, which applies not just to members of Customs but to the whole of the civil service.

The policy in respect of membership of societies (secret or otherwise) is based on the following:

> Civil servants must not misuse their official position to further their private interests or those of others. Conflicts of interest may arise from official dealings with, or decisions in respect of, individuals who share a civil servants private interests (for example, freemasonry, membership of societies, clubs and other organisations, and family). Where a conflict of interest arises, civil servants must declare their interest to senior management so they can determine how best to proceed.

Members of Customs who feel they have been subject to unfair treatment related to membership of an organisation are encouraged to make a complaint using the Department's normal procedures.

Customs and Excise (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what (i) equal opportunities and (ii) fair employment policies are implemented by the Customs and Excise Department in Northern Ireland; and which members of staff are exempt from these policies. [1911]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 6 June 1997]: Customs and Excise operates an equal opportunities policy for all its staff. The aim of the policy is to provide equality of opportunity for employment and advancement on the Department of the basis of ability, qualifications and aptitude for the work.

In relation to Northern Ireland in particular, the Department is committed to ensuring that the skills and abilities of staff from both the Protestant and Roman Catholic communities are developed and used to the full. This means that no job applicant or member of staff will receive less favourable treatment on the grounds of their religious belief or political opinion.

No member of staff is exempt from the equal opportunities or fair employment policies.

Financial Services Industry

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his plans for reform of the regulation of the financial services industry. [1584]

Mrs. Liddell: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 20 May, Official Report, columns 507–24.

Single Currency

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research he has commissioned or evaluated on the effect on the world gold price of the sale of excess reserves by states participating in the single currency. [1731]

Mrs. Liddell: Developments in the world gold market are kept under continuous review as part of the normal process of managing the official reserves.

Capital Gains and Inheritance Taxes

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations the Government have received in recent years from the Centre for Policy Studies, the Institute for Economic Affairs, the Adam Smith Institute, the Bow Group and the Institute of Directors about the relationship between capital gains and inheritance tax rates, investment decisions and Exchequer revenues; and if he will make a statement. [2793]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 9 June 1997]: One representation has been received since 1 May. This was sent by the Institute of Directors and concerned the effect of capital gains tax rates on investment decisions. We will consider carefully this representation, and any others which we receive.

Mr. Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policies on capital gains tax and the encouragement of business investment in (a) publicly quoted and (b) unquoted companies. [2796]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 9 June 1997]: Our manifesto contained a commitment to reviewing the effects of capital gains tax on long-term investment.

Minimum Wage

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the CBI regarding the impact on the economy of a national minimum wage. [1592]

Mrs. Liddell: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has not received any representations from the CBI on this matter. Business leaders will be represented on the Low Pay Commission, which will make recommendations to Government on the appropriate level of the minimum wage, taking into account the wider effects on the economy.

Public Borrowing

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his definition of the Government's golden rule in respect of public borrowing. [2979]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 10 June 1997]: Over the economic cycle the Government will borrow only to invest and not to fund current expenditure. Further details will be set out in my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's Budget Statement.

Private Health Insurance

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to remove the tax relief from private health insurance premiums. [2873]

(2) at current values of United Kingdom pensions fundholdings, what would be the effect on the value of those funds if payable tax credits on dividends paid by United Kingdom resident companies were reduced to (a) 15 per cent., (b) 10 per cent. and (c) 0 per cent.; and if he will make a statement on the ability of such funds under these circumstances to meet their obligations without receiving any additional contributions. [1854]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 2 June 1997]: Payments of tax credits issued with dividends of United Kingdom companies to pension funds and other exempt institutions and to individuals were about £5 billion in 1996–97. As the right hon. Member will be aware the consequences of any changes would depend on responses of the companies and institutions involved.

Banking Supervision

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to appoint to the new system of banking supervision only appointees from firms which have not been criticised by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors. [1445]

Mrs. Liddell: Appointments will be made on the basis of the skills, experience and integrity of the individuals concerned.

Mortgage Lenders

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will require mortgage lenders with tied insurance arrangements to display warnings that only one specified company's products are on sale in their branches. [2026]

Mrs. Liddell: No, the Government have no powers to require mortgage lenders to display such information, but welcomes the industry's Mortgage Code which comes into effect next month. Unless where insurance concerned is an investment under the Financial Services Act 1986, where the regulators' existing rules about providing information on whether agents are tied or independent already apply.

Profit-related Pay

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review the proposal to end tax relief on profit-related pay, with special reference to the first £1,000 of income. [2865]

Dawn Primarolo: I have noted my hon. Friend's suggestion but it would not be appropriate to comment on any possible tax change during the run up to the Budget.

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total cost of mortgage interest tax relief in Scotland in the years 1995–96 and 1996–97; and what it is estimated to be for 1997–98. [2532]

Dawn Primarolo: The cost of mortgage interest relief in Scotland was estimated to be £200 million in 1995–96.

This estimate has been obtained by applying the regional distribution of the cost of mortgage interest relief from analyses of Family Expenditure Surveys up to 1994, to the total figure for 1995–96. It is not possible to provide reliable estimates for mortgage interest tax relief in Scotland for 1996–97 or 1997–98.

Duty Free Shopping

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment his Department has made of the effect on the cross-channel ferry industry of the abolition of duty free. [2660]

Dawn Primarolo: None, but Customs and Excise have received copy reports commissioned by the industry outlining the likely effects of abolition from their perspective.

Tax Returns

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of tax returns were received by the Inland Revenue (a) prior to 31 October, (b) between 1 November and 31 January, (c) between 1 February and 5 April and (d) more than 12 months after the date of issue following the end of the tax year resulted in fines and penalties for late submission not involving fraud or wilful neglect in each of the above categories. [2130]

Dawn Primarolo: Few returns submitted within 12 months following the end of the tax year were likely to attract penalties for late submission. Returns submitted later than this were more likely to be subject to penalties.

Illegal Imports

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate she has made of (a) the loss of revenue to the Exchequer and (b) the loss of income to retailers in the United Kingdom due to the illegal importation of tobacco, wines and spirits. [2543]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs' current estimate of the total revenue evaded (excise duty and VAT) in a year through the smuggling of alcohol and tobacco is set out in the table below. The table also sets out Customs' estimate of the retail value of the smuggled goods at UK off-licence prices, including excise duty and VAT. The amounts actually lost to UK retailers and the Exchequer will be less than the amounts shown below. This is because many smuggled goods, particularly alcoholic products, represent additional consumption rather than substituting for similar goods purchased in the UK.

£ million

Product type	Revenue evaded	Retail value
Spirits	50	75
Wine	50	100
Beer and cider	110	235
Tobacco products	560	765
Total	770	1,175

The above estimate does not include any amounts for commercial fraud.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people under the age of 25 years are currently on the jobseeker's allowance scheme (a) in Winchester and (b) in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [1287]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Mark Oaten, dated 12 June 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on how many people under the age of 25 years are currently on the jobseekers allowance scheme (a) in Winchester and (b) in the United Kingdom.

ONS figures cover all unemployment-related benefits i.e. they include those receiving National Insurance Credits only, although these only constitute a small proportion of the total (approximately 10 per cent). JSA specific counts can be provided by Department of Social Security but not to the required geographical breakdown—only for Great Britain.

The ONS produces two measures of unemployment. The first, derived from the quarterly Labour Force Survey, is defined on a consistent and internationally recognised basis set out by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and counts as unemployed, people who are: a) without a paid job; b) available to start work within the next two weeks and c) have either looked for work in the past four weeks or are waiting to start a job already obtained.

ONS also publishes the monthly claimant count, which is based on the UK administrative system and includes all people claiming unemployment-related benefits at Employment Service offices on the day of the monthly count, who on that day had signed on as unemployed and available to do any suitable work. All people who attend an Employment Service office to sign are counted, irrespective of whether they are actually receiving benefit.

Both measures are described and compared in the ONS booklet How exactly is Unemployment Measured?, a copy of which is enclosed. This booklet is also available in the House of Commons Library.

ONS information is only available on the total number of people claiming all unemployment-related benefits (Jobseeker's Allowance or National Insurance Credits). In April 1997 on an unadjusted basis, people age under 25 years and claiming unemployment-related benefits numbered 245 in the Winchester parliamentary constituency and 440,028 in the United Kingdom. If specific JSA breakdowns are required these are available from the Department of Social Security.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 295

SESSION 1997–98

2nd June—12th June 1997

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
